

NROTC Unit Going On Semester Basis

Switch Next Fall Will Bring Carolina In Line With 51 Other Naval Groups

by Tom Peacock

Carolina's NROTC next fall will swing into line with 51 other units by adopting a standard quarter system for naval science courses.

The NROTC operates at present with a semester curriculum on a quarterly schedule.

CMDR. F. L. Edwards, executive officer and associate professor of naval science, yesterday said in explanation of the program:

"We sincerely believe that this new method of matriculation will not only help the naval student to understand his naval science courses better, but it will also be an immense help to him in his other college courses."

The Executive officer listed several other reasons for the switch to the semester system: less of an administrative problem; equally proportion the teaching load on the NROTC staff; indoctrination of new students will be improved, and students will have to attend class only three days a week.

Under the new system the students will attend classes Monday, Wednesday and Friday.

Phi Votes To Move BA School

The Phi Assembly at its meeting Tuesday night passed by a single vote a bill endorsing the removal of the School of Business Administration to State College.

The bill, which was introduced by Representative Fred Crawford, was supported on the grounds that the school is a professional and technical school and as such, properly belongs at State College where the other specialized technical schools of the Consolidated University are located.

Also, it was stated that the Business School was not as firmly established as other technical school here and that it is in the process of being moved on campus.

It was suggested in the bill that the three new buildings now being erected here for the School of Business Administration be turned over to the classics, language, and philosophy departments in the event that the school is moved to the State campus. The Assembly extended provisional membership to Edward Bizzell and Stuart Jones.
