UNC Sets Up Research Lab In Nash Hall

Doctor Thurstone, Wife To Head New Unit Here

The new Psychometric Laboratory has opened at the University with Dr. L. L. Thurstone, research professor of psychology, formerly of the University of Chicago, as director.

The laboratory, a division of the University's Psychology Department, is located in Nash Hall which has been remodeled and equipped for work on applications of psychological measurement.

The research program of the laboratory is being financed by foundation grants, by contracts with several branches of the federal government, and by industrial projects.

Dr. Thurstone was Charles F. Grey Distinguished Service Professor of Psychology of the University of Chicago before coming to Chapel Hill this fall. He is a past president of the American Psychological Association.

A member of the Chicago faculty for 28 years, he has gained worldwide recognition in measuring the speed and precision of mental processes. He has probably done more than any other psychologist to make tests for aptitudes and personality precise and measurable. With his wife, Dr. Thelma Gwyn Thurstone, his voluntary assistant in various psychological researches, he was for many years author of the intelligence tests of the American Council on Education, given to thousands of entering students at scores of American colleges each fall.

Dr. Thurstone will continue his research along these lines at the University. He and Mrs. Thurstone may be expected to provide many of the answers to employers in selection of workers and to students in the choice of courses looking toward professions or technical training.

Mrs. Thurstone, a psychologist of distinction in her own right and for several years director of the Division of Child Study of the Chicago Board of Education, will be associated with him in the work. A member of the School of Education staff here, she will be available to help local school systems in research projects growing out of local situations.

Plans have been made by the new faculty members, Dr. Dorothy Adkins, chairman of the University's Psychology Department, and Dean Guy B. Phillips of the School of Education, for developing expanded training programs in quantitative methods for psychology and education and in psychological services for the public schools.

$50,000 Uranium Hot Pot

Students Build Atomic Reactor In Utah's 'Nuclear Tech' Class

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah—There are two reasons that the United States flaunts only 16 completed atomic reactors. One is because the government cannot spare precious uranium for would-be private experiments.

The other is because the reactors themselves are so infernally expensive to construct and install. Two years ago, however, North Carolina State College broke through the first barrier. With $300,000 building capital and a supply of uranium salts fuel loaned by the Atomic Energy Commission with its blessing, the college began work on the world's first privately owned and operated

SHE PULLED the judges' eyes over the wool and went off with the title, "Miss Sweater Girl, 1952." She's Jeanne Davis, a 22-year-old from Opp, Ala. Jeanne, one among 500 entrants, seems to have made her point rather well.

MUSEUM PLANS SPEEDED

Spivak's 'Sweetest Trumpet' Will Play For Fall Germans

$850,000 Will Be Spent On Structure

Charlie Spivak, the man who furnished music for Raleigh's recent Debutante Ball will bring his orchestra here on November 7 for the Fall Germans.

The group will give a concert in Memorial Hall in the afternoon and play for the Woolen Gym dance later that evening.

"With the Virginia game the next day, plus the fact that it's also Homecoming day, this should give us the biggest and best weekend of the quarter," German Club President Bryant Hair said yesterday in announcing the event.

Spivak, whose publicity terms him as playing the "sweetest trumpet in the world", is one of the few name bandleaders who can do equally well for a concert or dance, Hair said.

The bandleader, who first studied trumpet at New Haven's Hill House School, played with several top bands before being signed by Ray Noble and the late Glenn Miller. It was Miller who eight years ago encouraged him to form his own band. He has been a top drawing card ever since.

Notches in Spivak's musical belt are 20th Century Fox's "Pin-Up Girl," "Follow The Boys" for Universal and a flock of box-office records created at the Paramount in New York, the Hotel Statler in New York, the Palladium in Hollywood and other top spots.

Building Location Planned For Behind Carolina Theater

By Bob Slough

The big new $850,000 William H. Ackland Memorial Art building moved a step closer to completion yesterday afternoon.

This new development came after Controller William D. Carmichael Jr. suggested to Chancellor Robert B. House that plans for the proposed art museum be accelerated.

The University was designated as the site for the art building in 1948 when the United States Circuit Court of Appeals reversed an earlier decision of the lower courts to give the $1,500,000 Ackland bequest to Rollins College of Florida.

Originally drawn up in 1938, the will left the money to Duke University, but the bequest was subsequently refused. An earlier will designated that the money be left to either Duke University, the University of North Carolina or Rollins College.

The money was invested in 1948 and has been drawing interest since that time.

"It seems to me we should immediately reach some decision as to the exact size and location of this building together with a determination of the size and location of the future Playmakers' Theatre," Carmichael said in a memorandum to the Building Committee.

"It now looks as though $850,000 to $900,000 will be available for the Ackland Building," Carmichael said. "The remaining funds, under the terms of Mr. Ackland's will remains in trust."

These funds will be expanded for art purchases and teaching activities calculated to broaden the understanding and appreciation of the fine arts throughout this section of the country, he added.

Site for the proposed building probably will be on Columbia St. behind the Carolina Theatre. The Playmakers' Theatre will be located nearby.

Grants For TV May Be Made To Carolina

The University Communications Center may soon receive funds to enable it to expand its present facilities. It is now under consideration as a key station for the production programs designed to disseminate liberal education among the masses.

The Communications Center was visited yesterday by Mrs. Ann Spinney, executive associate of the Fund For Adult Education. The fund was established in April, 1951, by the Ford Foundation as a medium for studying the extent of present liberal education in the United States.

The Ford Foundation this summer appropriated about $5,000,000 to the fund. This money is being used to enlarge on the activity already underway. Mrs. Spinney said the fund carries on most of its work and research through other institutions.

Should Carolina be selected as one of the key stations sites, the Communications Center will receive finances which it may use to buy the capital equipment needed in the production of the programs.

NEWS IN BRIEF

PITTSBURGH—Secretary of State Dean Acheson said yesterday there are signs Russia is junking its policy of "pressure" and "open aggression" in favor of one aimed at dividing the United States and its allies through "insidious . . . boring from within." Speaking before the CIO International Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, Acheson declared there must not be the "slightest relaxation" in the Allied defense drive even though the world would naturally "welcome" any step by the Soviets that would reduce the danger of hostility.

SEOUL—United States Marines and South Korean Allies were forced back from two hills on the western front after hours of determined attack, the Eighth Army announced yesterday. In the air, United Nations Sabre jets damaged four Russian-made MIG-15 jets in two dogfights.

PROVO, Utah—President Truman snapped back at critics of his administration's moral character yesterday in a political address in the Brigham Young University stadium. The President said he was "confident that history will bear me out." He dubbed criticism by "cronies in Washington" as "sheer poppycock—and politics." Truman declared, "I have done my best these seven years, to keep the quality of the federal service high . . ."

SPOKANE—Dwight D. Eisenhower set out yesterday to convince the power conscious voters of the Northwest that he and his party will not destroy the federal dams, power projects and conservation developments of the last 20 years. Eisenhower's tour through Washington state was bent on nullifying the effects of President Truman's recent whistle-stop through the same area.

MOSCOW—Politburo member George M. Malenkov charged yesterday that a Hitlerite regime in the United States is rushing the West toward a new world war. Keynoting the opening of the 19th Soviet Communist party congress for the first time in the place of Premier Joseph Stalin, Malenkov said the Soviet Union is "strengthening and will continue to strengthen" its defenses against the possibility of an American attack. He promised the Soviets would not attack the West, and advocated the "peaceful co-existence between capitalism and communism."
