Campus To Honor UN Today

World Banner Will Fly Here Until Sundown

Worldwide Menu Is Scheduled For Banquet In Lenoir

The seventh annual United Nations Day will be celebrated here today with a noon ceremony the most prominent feature on the varied program.

The midday service will take place on South Building steps from 11:45 until 12:05. It will feature a presentation of a book from the Chancellor of the University of Goettingen, Germany, to Carolina's Chancellor Robert B. House. German students Otto Vehrenkamp, Martha Shaefer, Dr. Fritz Hartmann, Eberhard Kindiger, and Helmut Deicher will present the book.

The UN flag will be presented by costumed students representing the UN member nations. It will be flown for the remainder of the day. The reading, "More Than A Dream" by Oscar Hammerstein II, will conclude the noon program.

Three movies "We The People", "Seeds of Destiny" and "This is the United Nations" will be shown at Gerrard Hall. All three will be shown at 9 and 10 a.m. and 12:15, 1, and 4:30 p.m.

An international supper will be served in Lenoir Hall beginning at 5:45. Trays should be taken through the cafeteria line before 6:45 and to the north dining room. The cost of the international menu is 85c.

The program will include international music and dancing, community singing of folk songs and special entertainment by students from foreign countries. Guests are asked to wear their native dress.

Songs and dances by international students will highlight the Hill Hall program at 8 p.m. Chancellor House will act as master of ceremonies. Paul Green's informal talk, "Nationalism and One World", will climax the evening. Green is a UNESCO representative, and Chapel Hill author and playwright.

Literature and exhibits are on display in the YMCA lobby, the library, Graham Memorial and Lenoir Hall.

All Roads Lead To Exasperation

Dr. Palmatier And Associates Find Patriotism Comes Hard

By Tom Parramore
"Go west, young man," said the adage and the AEC, so Dr. E. D. Palmatier of the Physics Department here did just that.

Not only he, but his wife and daughter, Dr. Langdon Berrys, also of UNC, J. T. Meery and W. G. Johnson, grad students, and Dr. W. W. Brown and family of Duke.

The beckoning finger was not Horace Greeley's, but that of the Atomic Research Commission.

The destination was White Mountain in California and the object was to secure data on the peculiar workings of the cosmic ray. So, late in June, when the weather was right, the group loaded seven and a half tons of equipment on a van and set out.

'And Lead Us Not Into Temptation'

My Thoughts As A German

By Fritz Hartmann
Today the free world celebrates the birthday of the United Nations.

Certainly this is not a day of pure joy, and it would be dishonest to conceal that we do celebrate this birthday with some insecure feelings. Even men's birthdays are not always pure joy. There are days of consideration, days of gratefulness with reference to the past, days of sorrow and hope with reference to the future. Therefore we should not give up to enthusiasms—the present situation of the world does not encourage one that way—and enthusiasm dulls the weapon of the intellect as well as the weapon of faith.

But we will need both of them during the coming year of the UN more than the weapons of battlefield. I do say we, and this includes all men who are not content to know delegates in New York, but know that the peace of the world is the consequence of the peace everyone should have within himself, within his family, his community, his country. This is what we should take into consideration today. And we should remember that this peace of the world can only be the realization of the peace which God is willing to make with us every time.

My thoughts as those of a German naturally are influenced by the fate of my country in its recent history. Writing down these thoughts I do it because of my belief that nothing in the world happens without reason, that everything has its sense. The example of the German nation shows the entire meaning of a nation surrendering its power and release it to misuse.

With the institution of the UN, mankind has created an immense concentration of power and possibilities. Nobody can judge whether it was fear or intelligence which made after the last war the idea of a world government so popular. But after seven years, this institution has become a picture of real human existence.

We do not know how this child will develop—for good or bad. Like everything human, it should be given to us to act likewise. We should ask for patience, moderation, and humility for us and for all the men and women who will speak in New York. We should remember at this very day that we cannot keep two records for our thoughts and acts, that we cannot enter at one time into the book of reason, and at another time into the book of faith. It exists only on one account, the account before God. Where there is no peace with God, there is never peace with men. Where there is no relationship to God, there is never a relationship between men.

Never before has the world had such a chance to make peace for all men; never before have men had such power as now in the assembly of the nations. Right or wrong use is in our hands.

Let us not be afraid of this task, but facing this task which is a proof for all mankind, we should remember the sixth petition of the Lord's Prayer: "And lead us not into temptation."
