

Carolina In Good Shape For Duke Game Saturday

Alexander Only Injury At Columbia

By Tom Peacock
The North Carolina football team will be in better physical condition this Saturday when it meets Duke than it has been the past three weeks.
The Tar Heels suffered only one major injury while winning its first game of the year against South Carolina last Saturday. Will Alexander, 165-pound defensive guard, hurt his ankle against the Gamecocks, and may not be able to play in the Duke contest.
The rest of the Carolina injury situation remains static, with the possible addition of defensive back Billy Williams to the lineup. Trainers Fitz Lutz and Doc White have been hoping Williams could return for the past two weeks, but a weak ankle has kept him sidelined.
The Tar Heels practiced long and hard yesterday, and head coach Carl Snavely is expected to work the team hard all week for the traditional battle with the Blue Devils of Durham.

Carolina is already in top spirits and will be up for Duke, with the breaking of an 11 game losing streak last week adding to the morale.
Snavely worked the defense especially hard on the pass patterns used by Duke's star sophomore quarterback, Worth (A Million) Lutz. With Ed Lockland leading the jayvees in the role of Lutz, the secondary and the junior varsity concentrated on passing long past dark.
The offense had a grueling workout under the lights of Navy Field, too. The Tar Heels lost seven fumbles last week against South Carolina, and the Carolina coaches are determined to correct some of the backfield's butterfingerness. Fumbles set up one Gamecock touchdown and lost two scoring chances for Carolina last week.

Duke always plays its best game against Carolina, and will especially be out to run up a big score against the Tar Heels. The Blue Devils started out the season rated as one of the best teams in the South, but have played three poor games in the last three weeks, losing two of them.

Duke barely squeezed past Wake Forest, 14-7, last week to take undisputed possession of first place in the Southern Con-

GEORGIA TECH safety man Jackie Rudolph comes up here to stop Alabama's fullback Tommy Lewis just short of a touchdown in the first quarter of Saturday's game between the Ramblin' Wreck and the Crimson Tide. Tech stopped the Alabama drive on the six and then went on to win, 7-3. Other players are Bobby Marlowe (32) of Alabama and Orville Vereen (35) of Tech.—NEA Telephoto.

Medics Win; Sigma Chi's Edge Zetes

The Med School's number four team took a hard-earned 13-6 victory over Emerson in Intramural tag football competition yesterday afternoon. This was a quarter-final contest in dormitory division play.

All the scoring came in the first half of play. The Med School built up a slender lead, and then spent the rest of the afternoon staving off scoring threats by Emerson. The winners also made several near-successful scoring attempts in the second half. The Med School had one touchdown nullified late in the game.

Sam Joyner and Adam Thorp scored the Med School touchdowns. Bo Jenkins added the game's only extra point.

In the Fraternity division Sigma Chi took an important 13-7 win over Zeta Psi. This was a continuation of a tie game played between the two teams last week—a 7-7 deadlock halted by darkness.

Bob Fountain scored for Sigma Chi in the first period, for the game's only tally. After this touchdown the two squads settled down to a defensive battle. Both teams threatened several times.

In the third game of the afternoon Sigma Nu romped to a 32-8 win over the Phi Gams. This was a quarter-final clash in the fraternity division, as was the Sigma Chi-Zeta Psi battle.

The passing of Carl Duke highlighted the potent Sigma Nu offense. Duke passed for three touchdowns. Thomas was on the receiving end of two Duke scoring heaves. Page caught Duke's first paydirt pitch.

The other Sigma Nu touchdown came on a pass thrown by Dick Hoggard. Hoggard made a long run before throwing the touchdown pass.
