Jim Dunn Tennis Anyone?

Some time ago an irritated undergraduate, enmeshed in the wicked, grinding wheels of physical education, clearly expressed his opinion of the physical education department. His contention was that boxing, tumbling, wrestling and swimming are useless and that if students are to be compelled to take six quarters of physical education, they should be allowed to choose something that is more useful to them and that they like better.

Three days later came a direct reply from the physical education department smugly stating that if the only effect the present physical education system had on students was to tients admitted since then, especially because they represent "a large cross-section of University students and faculty from all areas of the campus."

Dr. Brauer is equally proud of the building facilities—no wonder. In accordance with his opinion that "dentistry is an integral function working with medicine, pharmacy, nursing, and public health," the dental school adjoins the University Hospital. It has extensive modern equipment for all departments—10 chairs each in the oral surgery, children and prosthetic clinics and 54 chairs in the graduate clinics. It has separate Negro clinics, laboratories for all classes, graduate, postgraduate and refresher courses.

"An individual who does not take a refresher loses a lot," Dean Brauer believes.

One of the school's most unique facilities is that it has provided space for the faculty to carry on individual private practice.

The school is also widening the opportunities in the dentistry field to women by starting a course in dental hygiene next fall. The course will be two years or four years long and can be entered from either high school or after two years of college. The longer course will contain a broader curriculum although the two year program will be sufficient for certification.

Although the new dental school has been occupied only since Sept. 22, Dr. Brauer is already "pleased not only with the structural part of the building but with the functionality of it." The dental school is doing all it can "to give adequate facilities to the dentists

Express Yourself

Editor:

May I clarify a point regarding the present Presbyterian investigation in Chapel Hill, as mentioned in a letter to you printed Saturday from a person who asked that his name be withheld.

I quote from his letter: "The decision was presented to the church officers at a secret meeting and was to be disclosed to the congregation calmly next Sunday. Unfortunately, one of the officers is a reporter for a Durham newspaper. . . ."

An officer of the Chapel Hill Presbyterian Church and also as Chapel Hill Bureau for the Durham Herald and Sun, I am and have been keenly aware of both my professional and layman's responsibilities. At the same time, I believe, have I taken an ethical advantage of my church position in writing for our newspaper about it.

The officers of the church were told last Sunday that the report of the Presbytery's Commission was being presented to them as a public document. The church officers themselves endeavored to procure additional copies of the report for distribution to the congregation before Sunday's meeting, in order that members might be better able to comprehend its content when formally presented. Finding additional copies were not immediately available from the Commission in large number they had several hundred specially mimeographed here in Chapel Hill and have distributed them this week to members of the congregation.

The writer of the letter to you would have been a much fairer reporter had he checked on the background for his facts before taking his pen in hand.

Inspection Parties In Dorms

They come in at all times of the day. Some carry nothing but a sheet of paper and a pencil. They scrutinize the walls, the closets, the bureau drawers, the beds, everything.

They are an army of dorm managers, health inspectors, administration officials. Their purpose? To see that people abide by the rules. We are pleased that the University is making sure that the dormitories are kept in good physical condition.

We are concerned, however, that an organized array of men are continually walking through the men's dormitories. This is legal. Yet the privacy of over 2500 men is being disturbed.

We suggest that this team of inspectors post bulletins in a conspicuous place in each dormitory, with such notice giving the time the squad will be around.

As for the cooking, coffee drinking, and after dinner snacks in dorms, we suggest that dorm men consider the cockroach plagues before their stomachs. Some dorms are already overrun by the hungry creatures. And once they start, even in a new dorm, they're hard to stop.

X-Word And Pearson

Readers have been missing Drew Pearson's column, the Herblock cartoon, and even the crossword puzzle occasionally. We are glad to hear that people are reading our outside feature material.

The volume of student copy turned into the editor's office is gratifying, and we think we ought to run student material before we use our syndicated features. We will try to run both as much as space allows.

To those students who have been contributing to our columns, thanks. Keep them coming.
