California Tells About $$ Grants

EUGENE, Ore., Feb. 5—(Special) "We don't have grants-in-aid at California and I don't believe in paying college athletes," said the University of California's athletic director recently.

Brutus Hamilton spoke at the University of Oregon here on a panel composed of local sports figures.

"No one forces a boy to turn out," he said. "We have many potential athletes around campus who just don't have time to go out for sports."

The discussion centered around a question of the possibility of paying an athlete his grant-in-aid, obtained through the performance of a "work project", during the season he is participating in the major sport without requiring him to earn it. Such a plan has been proposed by Oregon Coach Bill Bowerman.

At least 75 percent of the football team needs at least partial help to stay in school, according to one of the panel members, and "just don't have the time during the season to work, attend practice and keep up with studies."

A weakness is "our system" was admitted by Hamilton after a member of the audience asked why the universities should make a profit from the major sports—especially football—if the athletes were not given some financial assistance.

He said that the football profits were not as great as imagined, but that this did not present a point in favor of grants-in-aid. However, he added, "where do you draw the line? Our drama department made a profit last year and they weren't paid."

Person Exhibit Displays Work Of Frenchman

An exhibition of 20 large and beautifully colored plates, selected from the book "Le Cirque" by the famous painter Fernand Leger, will be on view at Person Art Gallery from Monday through Feb. 28.

With the publication of his book "Le Cirque," Fernand Leger has joined the ranks of other well-known French artists who have produced outstanding publications.

The subject matter of Leger's book is the circus—his favorite theme. The text, written by the artist himself and reproduced in his own handwriting, consists of several essays on a visit to the circus in a small country town, on its performers, and their acts.

The illustrations are of a masterful boldness and the extraordinary brilliance of their colors give added proof of the artist's enthusiasm for the circus artists and his showmanship. In lively succession he depicts clowns, dancers, acrobats, bicyclists and surrounds them with all the gay paraphernalia of their art.

"Le Cirque" was published in Paris in 1950 and printed in lithographic process under the personal supervision of the artist.

This exhibition was organized and is being circulated by the Museum of Modern Art, New York, to museums and college galleries throughout the country.

Compulsory Health Bill Is Defeated By Di Senate

Christian Tradition Explained

By Mike Soper
"Although the various books of the Bible interpret the incarnation of Christ differently, we must accept their explanations as guideposts to God's living truth," the Rev. Maurice Kidder said this week.

He explained that Christian theology developed after the death of Christ to deal with practical spiritual problems which arose, such as those described by Paul in Thessalonians and Corinthians.

Mr. Kidder pointed out that although the concept of God the Father is implicit in the Old Testament, and that of God the Son in the New Testament, their relationship is not clearly established. The Council of Nicea settled the conflict between the divinity and the deity of Christ when it adopted the Nicene Creed. The Nicene Creed describes Christ as "being of one substance with the Father."

"The banishment of Arius for opposing the Nicene Creed established the precedent of allowing the state to deal with religious dissension," added Mr. Kidder.

Mr. Kidder addressed a Y sponsored group discussing "Religions of the World". It was the third talk of the series.

The popes of Rome became influential when the Roman capital was moved to Constantinople, said Mr. Kidder. The Emperor required their aid in dealing with the people of Rome.

Mr. Kidder described St. Augustine as the greatest Christian, next to Paul. Augustine developed Plato's philosophy—that we respond to God because he loves us. God's grace in causing good to be in us can lead to salvation said Mr. Kidder.

"Secularism was tremendously stimulated by the crusades, resulting in the glorification of culture and the enthronement of envy. This laid the way for the shift to the Aristotelian approach in religion."

St. Thomas Aquinas, drawing his outlook from Aristotle, marks the point of departure between Roman Catholicism and Protestantism, said Mr. Kidder. Aquinas held that reason is autonomous and that by rationalization man can know what his relation to God should be.

Business Fraternity Tours

Brothers of Alpha Lambda Chapter of Delta Sigma Pi, professional business administration fraternity, took their first professional trip of 1953 recently when the fraternity visited the manufacturing plant of White Furniture in Mebane.

Officials of the company conducted a guided tour, routing their visitors through the plant in its progress from rough lumber to finished furniture awaiting shipment.

AS A CLAMOR MOUNTED IN THE British press concerning President Eisenhower's decision to remove the U. S. 7th fleet from its blockade of Formosa, America's secretary of State, John Foster Dulles, arrived in London where he was greeted by British Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden (right). Eden criticized Eisenhower's decision, saying that to free Chiang Kai-shek's Nationalist forces for raids on the Communist-held mainland would make the chances for a peaceful settlement in the Far East "much more difficult."—NEA Telephoto.

NSA Referendum Bill Is Defeated

Move To Override Ham Horton's Veto Of Council Measure Fails By One Vote

By Louis Kraar
The stormy National Student Association issue cleared up last night in Legislature.

After an enthusiastic parley of debate, mostly between some opponents of the bill, the University Party, a bill to hold a referendum on NSA was firmly defeated.

UNC Students Charged With Theft At State

RALEIGH, Feb. 5—(Special) —Two college students, one from the University of North Carolina and one from State College, were bound over to Wake Superior Court recently after probable cause was found against the pair on charges of larceny.

Defendants Perry Cox and Bubber Hill are charged with stealing property valued at $345 from the Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity house on Hillsboro St. Cox is a State College student. Hill attends the University of North Carolina.

Cox pleaded guilty to helping steal a radio, record player, typewriter, a slide rule, laundry and dry cleaning. Hill pleaded guilty to larceny of the merchandise, which was found by Cox's father on a vacant lot near his home.

Detective Lt. R. A. Liles said the boys told him they had been on a party at the fraternity house earlier, had been drinking and returned to the house later that night "just for fun."

Judge Albert Doub set bond in each case at $200.

Tom McDonald (UP), who spoke favorably of NSA but originally introduced the bill, termed the opposition to NSA on campus as a thing that was "happening all over the country."

Ken Barton, regional NSA chairman, outlined the purposes of NSA. He termed the group "very much representative of students of this country." Running down the complete list of affiliated groups of NSA, Barton said they were "perfectly clean and not subversive."

Ed Stevens, (UP) parliamentarian, dramatically declared, "It is designed to kill NSA and it will. It's been a long range lethal plan." He said it originated with Ham Horton, president of the Student Body.

NSA is a national student group designed to voice student views in other organizations, exchange ideas on student government and plan scholarship, travel and other programs.

Wood Smethurst, campus NSA chairman, said that NSA was "hindered by criticism." He continued, "We are fighting shadows, unnamed opposition. The Tar Heel says 'opponents of NSA say', but who are the opponents? It is purely a personal campaign, and it is not fair. I ask you to defeat it (the bill for referendum), to defeat this fight against shadows."

Stilwell responded to hints by Stevens that it was a political issue, I don't know. I'm not too informed, but I believe that students should be given a chance to say whether they want to pay for NSA or not."

Stevens came back with, "Did we think once of going to the student body in a referendum about paying for SEC for which only 1800 can benefit?"

Stevens gave legislators what may have been the most exciting talk of the quarter, beginning, "I have broken party lines once before tonight and I'm going to do it again. You SP's can go back to sleep, and you UP's can wake up."

One vote last night made Ham Horton's veto of the controversial Student Council bill stick.

Following pro and con discussion on the bill, mainly by Gene Cook, former SP legislator, and UP Floor-leader Jack Stilwell, legislators cast the vote—25 for erasing the veto and 13 against, one short of the two-thirds majority required to brush aside presidential veto.

Speaker Jim McLeod (UP) read Horton's veto message and the battle began. Cook declared, "I am yet to find one case where political parties have sovereignty over any organization on campus."

Cook was referring to the term used by Horton in his veto statement. Horton outlined two reasons for his veto of the bill: 1) It "involuntarily" took the question, which concerned parties, out of their hands. 2) Independents were exceptions to the proposed law.

Stilwell said that he agreed the Student Council should be taken out of politics, but "this is not the bill."

Other bills passed were a bill to establish a committee to help work out a solution to the parking problem on campus and a bill to investigate installing candy and cigaret machines in all dormitories. Both bills passed with little opposition.

Everett Parker (UP) was sworn in to replace Jerry Russell (UP).

Calling Juniors

Juniors interested in being on the class social committee should contact Lou Wolfshiemer at the ZBT fraternity house.

Wolfshiemer issued the call yesterday and said the committee's function will be to plan the Spring junior-senior weekend. The senior committee already is set up.
