JERRY COOK
for
Secretary-Treasurer
OF STUDENT BODY

See Other Side UP UP

JERRY COOK, WHO SAYS HE BELIEVES in originality, came up with this handbill for voters this week. "Campaigns have almost got to the point of boredom," Cook said. "I just had to think of something original." The Student Party, his opposition, didn't like the handbill because it "promoted a lack of respect for student government." As for student reaction, it seemed to be summed up by one fellow in Old West. "Now the politicians are getting on the ball," said the voter with a smile.

Ogden Nash's Doggerel Impresses Crowd Here

By J. D. Wright

Reciting and commenting on the background of his more than 8,000 light poems, Ogden Nash delighted a Memorial Hall audience Tuesday night. Some 600 people were present.

Giving a brief review of how he became a writer of humorous poetry, Nash said he had been writing since childhood, and wrote his first poem when his sister was about to get married: "Beautiful Spring at last is here, taking my sister at last I fear." This went on for some 14 verses until he discovered his sister was getting married in January.

After a year at Harvard, Nash said, "I developed good taste in poetry and stopped writing."

He then went to work for a publishing house where he became fascinated with bad poetry—thought it pathetic—and wondered what would happen if someone who knew the rules of poetry wrote bad poetry consciously.

He discovered it paid off when one day while in his office he wrote, "You sit in your office at 242 Madison Avenue, and think you have an important position haven't you."

Having discovered what he terms "a leak in the dike of the English language," he sold the verse and soon received a request for more.

Referring to himself as the "Candy is dandy, but liquor is quicker" man, Nash said he had never understood exactly what the phrase means.

"An Evening with Ogden Nash" was the last of a series of presentations for this school year by the Student Entertainment Committee.

Aid Seekers This Summer Have Til May 1

The deadline for receiving applications on Summer School scholarships has been extended to May 1, Dean Guy B. Phillips said yesterday.

"A few scholarships are still open," Dean Phillips said yesterday, "and we are ready to make these available to qualified teachers if prompt application is made."

"They will cover the tuition and expenses incurred during one of the six-week summer terms, and represent an unusual opportunity for working teachers to extend their professional study at no cost to themselves," he said.

Application blanks may be secured by writing to Dean Phillips' office. The applications will be reviewed by the Scholarship Committee and the winners will be notified promptly.

Previous college record, success in teaching, and evidence of contribution to educational progress in the local community will be considered in the awards.

A Legal Loophole

No CUSC Anymore --Horton

By Louis Kraar

The Consolidated University Student Council actually doesn't exist anymore, President Ham Horton said yesterday.

He went on to explain his statement, "There can be no Carolina CUSC committee because there is no one to call a meeting." Horton referred to the fact that Jim Adams, head of Carolina's delegation to the three-school student government group, quit last month.

"And there can be no CUSC," Horton continued, "because by the very nature of the organization it has to be made up of the entire Consolidated University."

Horton quit the group also, saying that he thinks it is the only way to revise the group. "If there were any other way to revise the CUSC, I would not have quit," Horton said yesterday.

President Horton said he was digging out the legal loopholes just to prove a point that the problems of the three schools are different and must be dealt with differently.

In an effort to iron out the problems, Horton said he and other CUSC officials were meeting with William Friday, assistant to President Gray, to work out another plan of consolidated student government.

Meantime, observers are wondering what's going to happen Saturday morning at Greensboro when the CUSC meets. Carolina will be represented unofficially by a Consolidated University Day committee, said Horton. On the other hand, some of the remaining CUSC committee said they were going to do the representing.

Horton said that no one would represent Carolina officially at the meeting. He said the CU day committee was only representing Carolina as far as participation in the day's program was concerned.

Gray Silent On Student As Trustee

President Gray had no comment yesterday on the proposal to include a student on the Board of Trustees.

At a press conference held in his office, the president said Trustee elections are not in the realm of administration affairs, hence his no comment. Anyway, he noted, students already are able to have their opinions brought before the Trustees. Students may be extended privileges of the floor at the Trustee meetings or have their views voiced for them by a Trustee.

Commenting on the Consolidated University Student Council, Gray said that "there are very few problems that are universal" for Carolina, State and WC. The Consolidated University president does not expect the council to present a united student viewpoint. He does think, however, that the council should do much to forward understanding and spirit among the three schools.

The question of student automobiles is under study, as a result of Trustee and faculty requests, Gray reported. The University now sends out to parents of prospective freshmen and transfers letters requesting that students not bring cars to the campus. Gray said that no plan has been adopted to take more strenuous action. WC students do not have cars on their campus.

In the past, Gray has raised the question of student automobiles before CUSC meetings, indicating that they pose a serious problem to the University.

Gray also announced that his office will take direct action on the findings of the faculty conference as soon as he receives corrected and final reports from conference committee chairmen.

LIB MOORE

Yack Hopeful Offers Views

Yack editorial candidate Lib Moore yesterday released a pre-election statement giving her experience and qualifications.

"Experience is a prime factor in the election of a public official," Miss Moore said. "It is even more important when the students are considering the qualifications of a candidate for such a responsible position as Yack editor."

"I have worked on the Yack ever since I came to Carolina," she added, "besides having a great deal of previous experience. I believe that I am capable of serving as editor of the '54 Yackety-Yack."

'Abolishment' Of Gym Fees Not Asked, Says Penegar

Student Party Advocates Placing Payment
Of Student Gym Fees On Optional Basis

The Student Party's stand on athletic fees, partially misrepresented in Wednesday's Daily Tar Heel, was clarified yesterday by Ken Penegar, SP presidential candidate.

"... No one is advocating abolition of all athletic fees, but that they be made optional, so that many students who cannot take advantage of gym privileges, including most graduate students, will not have to continue shelling out $13.33 wasted for them each quarter," Penegar said.

The budgets of the institutions you pay $40 a year to be carried in detail on page 4.

Penegar was referring to an SP platform plank which proposes "to establish a plan for the voluntary payment of these fees." It has been a leading issue in the campaigning for spring elections.

"It came as no great surprise that the athletic department raised a great cry of protest at our suggestion to end mandatory payment of the unjust athletic tax. Anything that might rock their boat of financial security will always be labeled 'absurd,'" Penegar continued.

"Why is it that that department cannot go to the General Assembly with requests for sufficient funds to maintain the building (Woollen Gym) and to pay for its construction? Why should the students have to pay your salaries and your mortgages? That is the responsibility of the state of North Carolina," Penegar declared.

The mortgages he referred to amount to $12,000 yearly paid on the bond issue originally floated to help build the gym.

"The students here in 1876," continued Penegar, "may have voted to support the athletic department with their taxes, but that was before the time of active support by the state. Neither does action then have to bind the students today.

"Furthermore, I don't believe that the students want to continue this burden today. This is a state institution and education should be provided at lowest possible cost to the student.

"Let's see what the students want on April 15th. In addition to the general will of the students that will be expressed in the election, I am proposing a referendum on this particular issue, so that the students can say whether they want to continue subsidizing the Athletic Department and Woollen Gym to the tune of $40 a year."

Wednesday's Daily Tar Heel story erroneously stated that the SP wants to abolish all athletic fees. The campus political party wants payment of the fees put on a voluntary basis.

Students pay $10 for gym fees and $3.33 to the Carolina Athletic Association a quarter.

SP officials said that many students have to pay the fees who don't get to take advantage of its benefits. Student fees comprise about one-eighth of the athletic fund. In the Fall Quarter, a student may see over $18 worth of football games as a member of the Athletic Association.

Students have a voice in the Athletic Association through three student members on the Athletic Council. The student members of the council are the student body president, Monogram Club president and Carolina Athletic Association president.

Top Candidate Of SP Writes 'Big 5' Views

Ken Penegar, running on the SP ticket for president, yesterday outlined his views on the five questions asked editorially in The Daily Tar Heel of all candidates. His statement:

1. For or against UNC in NSA? "I am definitely in favor of Carolina's continued leadership in the only American student organization that represents student opinion on a national and inter-national basis. I think, however, that the students themselves should say what Carolina should do."

2. Consolidated University Student Council. "I think the students at the three institutions have a responsibility to make consolidation work. Horton threw a monkey wrench into that cooperation."

3. Student Entertainment Committee. "Several plans have been put forth. There seems to be no agreement on these, but I do think that some equitable plan could be (See PENEGAR, page 4)

AFROTC Men Are Visiting Pope AF Base

Approximately 70 University AFROTC Cadets are visiting Pope Air Force Base today under the guidance of Major Joe O. Young, assistant professor of Air Science and Tactics here.

The students are seniors, members of the Air Science IV Flight Operations classes and of the Arnold Air Society.

During their visit, which is described as a routine orientation tour, the cadets will observe the facilities and functions of the Carolina Air Base, visit Tactical Air Command Operation Center, and the Base Flight Operations Center, and will witness a Tactical demonstration of paratroop operations performed by the famed 82nd Airborne Division.

The cadets will have luncheon at the Pope Field Base and will dine in the evening at Pope Air Force Base Officer's Club.

Blood Drive Fails Goal

The campus blood drive fell 282 pints short of its 1,009-pint goal yesterday.

Blood contributions yesterday brought the total number of pints given in the current drive to 727.

NROTC won the cup which is presented each year to the organization of over 100 members having the best percentage of blood donors. The NROTC unit percentage was 60.2 as compared with 13.1 per cent for the AROTC.

Red Cross officials said the number of pints of blood given here was not as large as expected in view of the drive made for donors made by campus organizations.

BOB GORHAM, UP presidential candidate, says "The best way to maintain the student's respect for student government is to run a sensible, clean, high-level campaign. I pledge to continue the UP campaign in this manner."
