

THE NORTH CAROLINA SYMPHONY will play an adult concert in Memorial Hall here tomorrow night at 8:30. "The Symphony on Wheels" plays half of its annual 140 concerts free to school children. Conducted by Dr. Benjamin F. Swalin, the nationally-known orchestra is on its eighth annual tour throughout the Tar Heel State. Also on the program tomorrow night will be Beatrice Griffin, internationally-known violinist. She has appeared in concerts at the Royal Castle and Rosendahl Castle in Stockholm before King Gustav of Sweden and the Royal Family. During the war she was presented decorations by Swedish royalty and the Finnish Government for her efforts on behalf of wounded soldiers, for whom she played innumerable concerts.

George Williams Will Present Organ Recital Tonight At 8:30

George Williams, senior music major from Raleigh, will present a graduating recital of organ music in Hill Hall tonight at 8:30.

The program will consist of major works by Bach, Buxtehude and the contemporary composers Darius Milhaud, Ernst Pepping and Olivier Messiaen.

Williams began his organ study at St. Mary's School in Raleigh with Russell Broughton and has continued through his four years at the University with David Brandt and Jan Philip Schinhan. A violin pupil of Edgar Alden, he has played with the University Symphony Orchestra, and has also served as piano accompanist for the Chapel Hill Choral Club.

He is now organist at the Chapel of the Cross. Last Spring, he played another full organ recital at Hill Hall as part of his junior requirement.

The program will begin with the chorale variations by Buxtehude on "How Brightly Beams the Morning Star," followed by two major works of Bach, the canonic variations on "From Heaven Above

I Came," and the Prelude and Fugue in E minor, known as "The Wedge" because of the curious shape of the fugue theme. The second half of the program will consist entirely of contemporary organ music, Ernst Pepping's Concerto II, Milhaud's "Pastorale" and "Diptyque" by Olivier Messiaen.

New Light Shed On Career Of Former Dean MacNider

By Mary Grace Megginson

One day while performing an experiment, Dr. William de B. MacNider turned to his students in the University Medical School and asked, "What makes some people so pompous?"

And, without waiting for an answer, as he frequently didn't, he said: "If I were asked what is the first requirement for the search of truth, I would say humility. And if I were asked for the second requirement I would say humility. And if I were asked for the third requirement I would say humility."

This is one of the many incidences in the life of the late Dean of the University of North Carolina Medical School recalled in the book, "The Good Doctor," just released by the University Press.

The memorial volume, with stirring tributes to Dr. MacNider and selected essays and addresses by him, catches the spirit of the man who knew and loved Chapel Hill and the University as few other persons ever have.

On Faculty 51 Years

At the time of Dr. MacNider's death on May 31, 1951, the University had been in existence for 156 years and he had served on its faculty 51 years, three years as Dean of the School of Medicine. He was one of the first five professors in the University to be designated as Kenan professor in 1918 and in 1924 he was named Kenan professor in the University, under the designation of Kenan Research Professor of Pharmacology. At the time of his death he was Kenan Research Professor of Pharmacology Emeritus.

Victor S. Bryant of Durham, chairman of the Trustees Visiting Committee, who contributes one chapter in the memorial volume, says he considers it "a lasting tribute to the youthfulness and timelessness of Dr. MacNider's thought and work that one of his youngest students, William W. McLendon of Greensboro, conceived and carried out the plan for the book, 'The Good Doctor.'"

"It was characteristic of Dr. Billy

(as he was affectionately known by many) that he at 68 and 19-year-old Bill McLendon, who compared him to Osler, became such fast friends. During the reading of Osler's 'Aequanimitas,' Bill first became interested in compiling Dr. MacNider's talks and essays. Another of Dr. MacNider's youngest friends, Mrs. Shirley Graves Cochran, helped arrange and edit the material of the book."

A leather-bound copy of the volume was presented to the Division of Health Affairs Library recently on behalf of Dr. MacNider's daughter, Miss Sally Foard MacNider of the University Library staff. Co-editors McLendon and Cochran made the presentation for Miss MacNider.

Young McLendon is the son of Major L. P. McLendon of Greensboro, chairman of the Trustees' Committee on the Division of Health Affairs, and Mrs. Cochran is a former staff member of the University of North Carolina Press. Her husband is a member of the Institute of Government staff.

Chancellor Robert B. House, in the opening chapter, says that Dr. MacNider "was the most completely identified personality in body, mind and spirit, with Chapel Hill and its environs and its people, and with the University of North Carolina, of any man with whom we have been associated."

"He was raised in his mother's house on the spot where the Post Office now stands, across from the campus on the dusty or muddy rambling old Franklin Street. This spot was the congregating place of young and old, black and white, country people and town people. It was more than just a physical neighbor of the campus. It was the heart and center of the life of the place."

Great Nature Lover

"He scuffed over the very soil of the place, waded every stream, hunted in all the fields and woods, loved and cared for every wildflower; cultivated, enjoyed and shared every beautiful thing in the form of flower and shrub which can grow in Chapel Hill. The trees were his personal friends, and he noted their sprouting, growth and decay with the same loving, scientific care with which he attended, as a physician, his friends and neighbors. The whole natural setting he loved from the break of dawn in the sky, through the busy day, on through the dusk and twilight into the meditative evening hours."

"A chapter by Dr. William M. Coppridge of Durham includes passages from his address on the occasion of the presentation of Dr. MacNider's portrait to the University on December 15, 1946.

"I can speak for the many hundreds of his students whom he has taught and inspired over the past 40 years," Dr. Coppridge said, "when I say, that as a teacher, he has had few equals."

Will Be Remembered

"Uncompromising in his insistence on attention to detail, scornful of indolence and inactivity, he has always been sympathetic and shown a real interest in the progress of every student. In his work he never asked anyone to go further or work any harder than he himself was willing to do. He has so lived, that his life is the authority of his words."

"Not for many a year shall his face and figure and radiant personality go from the memory of them that love him, nor will the tradition of him and his deeds and words go from them, who from their fathers, know of him," Dr. Coppridge said.

Victor Bryant in his tribute said that no man of his entire acquaintance "was more considerate of his fellow man, more diligent in his search for truth, more loyal to his University and profession, and more reverent to his God" than Dr. MacNider.

"He possessed a genius for friendship," he said. "Many who knew him intimately place love for his fellowman as his predominant characteristic."

"His friendship went deeper than mere amiability and courtesy and his interest in his fellow man embraced all mankind, particularly that part of it which was in trouble."
