Browns in the shuffle when pro football was reorganized immediately following the war. "However, I got messed up," says Steve, "when one of Coach Brown's assistant's misunderstood me. Coach Brown was still in the Navy at the time when this assistant asked me at Great Lakes whether I wanted to play ball. I told him that I did but he told Coach Brown that I was undecided and Coach Brown doesn't operate that way — you either do or you don't."

"Anyway, this coaching job opened up for me at Hiram College and I took it." Hiram is a small school in Ohio and Belichick was head coach there for three years before he joined Edwards at Vanderbilt.

At Carolina Steve is mostly concerned with the pass defense, a specialty which he performed very well at Vanderbilt. One year his team was fifth in the nation in that category.

Belichick says that defense is a "state of the mind. Some players think mostly about carrying the ball and they are offensive minded. In that respect I think it will be a few years under this new substitution rule before these players realize that they are going to have to get the ball before they can run with it."

He goes on to say that he would rather coach under the two-plate system because that way "you can think about one thing and

Big Legislature Hassle Evolves Over Orientation Study Report

Said Fleishman, "It is inconceivable to me how the chairman of the committee (Brown) could make a statement on behalf of the Committee which might lead one to believe that the committee had discussed the point in question. The fact of the matter is that the Committee has in no way discussed the charges of organizational overloading or orientation groups. It is because I will not sign a statement which I definitely and categorically know to be extremely inaccurate on one particular point in question that I have refused to sign the report."

Brown introduced a bill to the legislature asking that the chairman of the Orientation Committee be appointed by the outgoing president on or before February 15, and that the Orientation Committee members be selected by a committee composed of the chairmen of the Interdormitory Council, the City Council, the Diabetic Senate, the Philanthropic Society and the Orientation Committee. Heretofore the orientation committee has been selected by the president who will be in office the next year.

Other Action
The Legislature passed bills appropriating $300 to the University Club, $27.50 for CUSU space in the Yackety Yack, and a bill setting fall elections for December 8, with run-offs on December 15.

Gordon Forester (SP) introduced a bill asking that $17,700 dollars be transferred from the Publications Board surplus to the general student government surplus. The amount was erroneously reported yesterday as $17,000.

Also approved was a bill asking for an amendment to the Student Government Constitution changing the election laws clauses. The amendment will be voted on by the student body in fall elections.

Jim Crouch (UP) was unseated for non-performance of duty. Absent were Janice Jurzack (SP), Alice Chapman (UP), Robert Farrell (UP), Bob Grimes (UP), Reuben Leonard (UP), Lionel Perkins (UP), and Tom Shores (UP).

Masonic Notice
