Privette, who was backed by both major political parties on the campus, won over John E. Durham of Mocksville, who ran on an independent ticket.

Voting was close for three other major offices and a recount will be held in the race for vice-president. Joe Hough of Star won the office by four votes, 446 to 442.

Jean Butler of Charlotte was named secretary, and John Devos of Hinsdale, Ill., was elected treasurer.

Treasurer Candidate To Speak Wednesday

Joshua S. James, candidate for state treasurer, will speak here Wednesday night at 8 o'clock in Gerrard Hall.

Announcement of the address was made yesterday jointly by Prof. Alex Heard, faculty member and president of the Orange County Young Democratic Club, and Al House, law student and president of the University YDC.

James' appearance will be the final one in a series of "Meet the Candidate" addresses brought to the campus this year by the YDC. James' opponent, the incumbent state treasurer, Edwin Gill, appeared here in March.

James won state-wide recognition as utilities commissioner in his fight to keep utility rates down. A native of Pender County and a graduate of the UNC Law School, James now has a son at UNC.

The YDC also announced that there will be a dutch dinner honoring James at the Pines Restaurant at 6:30 Wednesday. Both sponsoring clubs have extended an invitation to the public to attend both the dinner and the address.

Anti-McCarthy Tabs On Way For Students

Those who don't like Sen. McCarthy next week will be offered the opportunity to wear a button advertising the fact.

The buttons—which say in red on a white background, "I Don't Like McCarthy"—are being procured by Joel Fleishman, a student politico from Fayetteville who said he first heard about them from a friend at Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore. It was at Johns Hopkins that the button plan was initiated.

2nd To Lee . . .

Rebel Led 'Lincoln's CS Army'

As a cavalryman, his foes in the Union army rated him a greater general than Jeb Stuart.

As a commanding officer, his men idolized him as no other general officer in the Confederate Army was idolized, with the exception of General Lee.

As a raider, he marched more miles and fought more battles than any other general of the South.

As an undefeated, Abraham Lincoln secretly picked him, and the remnant of his command, for a military expedition against Maximilian's Empire in Mexico. He was Abraham Lincoln's Confederate general.

He invaded Mexico with a thousand desperate men — the last armed soldiers of the Confederacy — and tossed aside the glittering prize which Lincoln had offered him, to join the Emperor Maximilian.

In his old age, he became the Grand Old Man of Missouri and a living legend of the Civil War . . . and when he died, more people attended his funeral than any other funeral of the postwar South except the funeral of Jefferson Davis in Richmond.

Who is he? Major General Joseph Orville Shelby, C.S.A., sometimes commander of the Missouri Cavalry Division of the Confederate Army of the Trans-Mississippi, which matched in strength the Army of Northern Virginia. And until today, he has been almost forgotten, outside of Missouri, his adopted state.

The first biography of this remarkable American, entitled "General Jo Shelby: Undefeated Rebel," was published yesterday by the University press. It is the work of a Virginia writer, Daniel O'Flaherty of Richmond, who has had a varied career as newspaperman, radio news executive, and magazine writer. Long a student of the Civil War, and having a special interest in the literature of the American Southwest, O'Flaherty has been engaged in research for the biography of Shelby since 1949.

In bringing to life again the remarkable story of the Mexican venture, the Shelby biography also throws new and important light on Abraham Lincoln's plans for the South after the Civil War; plans never voiced, except in confidential messages to such men as Joe Shelby, and through confidential messengers to Jefferson Davis such as Union Brigadier General Francis Preston Blair Jr. of Missouri — who was Shelby's first cousin.

Youngest Retired Baptist Minister

J. C. Herrin, After Busy Trip To North, Now Mowing The Grass, Planting Garden

By KEN SANFORD

At 39, the Rev. J. C. Herrin likes to refer to himself as the youngest retired Baptist minister in the state.

Herrin, UNC Baptist Student Union secretary recently was ousted by the General Board of the State Baptist Convention on a charge of being the source of "intolerable friction" in the local Baptist Church, said when interviewed that he has no immediate plans for the future.

"I am getting the grass mowed and the garden planted," Herrin said. "I am also answering the hundreds of letters that I have received. You know, I have only received one letter that was in any sense unfavorable."

"At the request of Sunday School superintendent in the local Baptist Church, I am continuing to teach a class of students on 'Our Baptist Heritage.'"

Herrin and the Rev. James W. Ray, state secretary of the BSU who was also fired by the Baptists, recently returned from a trip in the North. "We were not looking for a job," Herrin said. "We wanted to give students in Northern seminaries the assurance that they will be able to return to North Carolina and the South despite the swing away from liberalism toward reactionary fundamentalism."

"We discovered there a national interest from the heads of churches and church councils as to the meaning of the trends in the South which
