Disk Jockey Jimmy Capps Heads Blanket Party Here

MAESTRO JIMMY CAPPS

... there'll be dancing in the streets

Popular disk jockey Jimmy Capps and his "Our Best To You" radio show are coming to the UNC campus Nov. 5, according to the Interdormitory Council.

The Council is sponsoring the WPTF personality, along with the cheerleaders, University Band and a special floor show in its first "blanket party" for students, faculty and townspeople. Fraternities and sororities have been asked to take part in the program also.

The program will begin at about 10 o'clock on the night of Nov. 5, following a special pep rally. On Nov. 6, the Tar Heels will play South Carolina.

A parade, commencing in Y-Court at 9 p.m., will end in the Upper and Lower Quad courtyards. Cheerleaders and band will lead the pep rally until 10:30.

From 10:30 until midnight, Capps will broadcast "Our Best To You" directly from Lower Quad.

Capps will bring with him a five floor show, featuring David Phipps baritone; Chee-Chee and Tom Davis, Nashville dancing team; a girls' trio from Peace College in Raleigh, and Becky Lee (Miss Dunn, 1954), who will do pantomimes.

The show will be a preview of a television show Capps is planning.

Raleigh Street will be blocked off for dancing. Those who don't want to dance will sit on blankets on Lower and Upper Quad courts.

Capps has said his radio show— from 10:30 until midnight Mondays through Fridays—has received better than 100,000 pieces of mail, much of it from Carolina, in its eight years. He said his show has imitators from Richmond to Atlanta. A F80 jet airplane in Korea is named for the program, too.

"We'll Beat Vols," Say Tar Heels

By CHALMERS POSTON

The Carolina players poured into the dressing room, jubilant over their 14-7 victory over Wake Forest. It was their best game of the year and they were very satisfied that this was it... that this was the game that they needed to make them a football team. George Foti, blood showing on his jersey, commented with a smile: "we'll beat Tennessee now that we've started going." The players slapped each other on the back, repeatedly saying "nice game."

The players talked about the fight in the closing moments. Len Bullock said that he was not happy about the fight. "We won the game and that's what counts," Bullock pulled off his jersey and the red welts on his body showed that it was a rough game.

Line Coach Marvin Bass came in and made the rounds, congratulating each player. Bass had no comment on the game or the fight. Just then head coach George Barclay came in, and

TV To Serve Whole State

The aim of the Consolidated University's educational television station WUNC-TV, scheduled to begin operation late this fall, is to serve the entire state.

That point was emphasized by Provost J. Harris Purks, chairman of the Programming Council, composed of representatives of the three institutions, in an address before the Chapel Hill Rotary Club recently.

He said that although telecasts directly from the transmitter here will be limited to a radius of around 100 miles, many of the programs will be carried all over the state through hookups or through kinescope recordings.

One of the primary objectives of the station, which will have studios on each of the three University campuses at Raleigh, Greensboro and here, will be to present the various social and economic aspects of the life of the state, to the end that improvements may be indicated, Provost Purks explained.

Although it will be strictly a non-commercial station, with em-

Says Pres. Gray:

University's Work Not Through

(Editor's note: Following is a report on the president of the Consolidated University of North Carolina, as seen by the chief of PNC's News Bureau. Recently The Daily Tar Heel printed a sketch of Gordon Gray, by Reporter Charles Childs, in which Gray's relations with his students were discussed. Now, part of the story of the president and his university.)

By ROBERT MADRY

Director, UNC News Bureau
Gordon Gray, rounding out four years as president of the Consolidated University of North Carolina, feels the University is serving the state in a magnificent way and thoroughly justifies the support given it.

But he takes an extremely modest view of his own part in the University's progress during the period.

"The demonstrable accomplishments which exist have been the result of the dedicated efforts of the people of our three institutions," Gray says, "but there are many objectives we have not been able to reach so far."

"I'm convinced that much more needs to be accomplished to reach the level of excellence that all of us are trying to attain."

Gray's associates, however, take a more optimistic view of the situation. They saw that in his typically modest way he has under-rated his personal achievements as well as those of the University in general.

One associate says Gray "has set such a fast, hardworking pace that none of us can keep up with him." "He puts his mind, heart, soul and body into every job he undertakes and he has a deep-rooted passion for excellence and fair play. It is understandable, therefore, that he always strives for but seldom feels that he has achieved perfection."

Gray resigned as secretary of the Army in 1950 to accept the presidency of the Consolidated University, which includes the university here at Chapel Hill, North Carolina State College in Raleigh and Women's College at Greensboro.

Gray was named by a nominating committee which had spent more than a year seeking a successor to Frank P. Graham. Gray received the unanimous vote of the Board of Trustees.

In the last four years the Consolidated University has experienced a rapid growth in enrollment, physical facilities, state appropriations, private endowments and gifts, new schools and departments and in the variety of courses offered.

Gray emphasized in his inaugural address that he felt the University should "serve every man, woman and child in the state, rich or poor, planter or tenant, executive or worker."

He reported recently that an informal survey showed that the university now touches directly in an educational way more than two million people of North Carolina, approximately half the state's population.

"While many thousands of those educational services have been rendered at the three institutions," Gray said, "the great bulk of them have been off the campuses, through such activities as extension classes, correspondence instruction, agricultural demonstrations, the North Carolina Symphony, the Gaston Technical Institute and in many other ways."

The mission of the University, Gray says, is to "become and continue to be the brain, the nerve center, the heart and the conscience and the will of the state."

Two years ago Gray inaugurated a faculty conference on "The State of the University." Approximately 200 representatives of the three faculties were invited to participate for the purpose of examining basic educational problems and procedures at the three institutions.

The first conference proved so successful it has become an annual affair. Many of the recommendations growing out of the first two conferences already have been adopted.

A number of organizational changes have been made or are being made as the result of a management survey Gray instituted two years ago with the approval of the trustees. He felt some changes were necessary due to "the significant growth and expansion of the University."

Another of his goals is closer cooperation between the University and the public schools of the state. Gray continues to work long hours, but he manages to find time for an occasional round of golf. He generally arrives at his office between 8 and 8:30 a. m. and often is there until 6:30 or 7 p. m. His general health is excellent, although he looks somewhat older than his 45 years.

On several occasions Gray has taken time from his duties at the University to accept special government and other assignments.

Holman Talks On Counselling

Dr. C. Hugh Holman, Chairman of the College of Arts and Sciences, spoke on "Academic Counselling" recently in Carroll Hall.

Dr. Holman was the featured speaker of an Inter-Service-Training Program for the personnel staff of the Dean of Women and for other interested persons on campus, the second in a series of five programs.

Speaking on "Academic Counselling," Dr. Holman outlined the present academic advisory system and discussed the policies and frequent points of difficulty regarding absences and attendances. Emphasis was upon the regulations, responsibilities and active obligations of women students, and the procedures set up to help the student meet them.

Dr. Holman received his Bachelor of Science, magna cum laude, with a major in chemistry and a minor in biology in June, 1936. In June, 1938, he graduated cum laude with a Bachelor of Arts, majoring in English and minoring in history.

Dr. Holman was Director of public relations at Presbyterian College, 1936-39; Director of radio and instructor in English, Presbyterian College, 1939-1942; part-time instructor in English at Presbyterian College, 1942-1944; editor of Jacobs Press, 1942-1944; state publicity, South Carolina Council for National Defense, 1942-1944; Academic coordinator and physics instructor, 2199th AAFBase Unit, 1944-1945; Academic Dean, Presbyterian College, 1945-1946.

His Ph.D. was received at the University of North Carolina in 1949. He became Assistant Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences in 1953 and Chairman of the College of Arts and Sciences in 1954.
