Student Solons Start Meeting Today At Noon

Twenty-nine Carolina students will leave shortly after noon today for the state capitol in Raleigh to attend the 18th North Carolina Student Legislative Assembly.

Today's session will begin at 4 p.m. with a plenary business session, including the election of officers and adoption of rules for this year's meeting.

Carolina delegate Joel Fleishman is a candidate for speaker of the House of Representatives for the three-day assembly.

Other UNC delegates to the House are James Turner, floor leader; Lewis Brumfield, Milton Cooke, Charlie Dean, Harold Downing, Sue Fink, Gordon Forster, chairman of the delegation; Jim Holmes, Anne Huffman, Charlie Hyatt, Tom Lambeth, David Mundy, J.J.I. Rainwater, Keith Snyder and Bob Young.

Delegates to the Senate are David Reid, floor leader; Virginia Agnew, Manning Muntzing and Scotty Hester, alternate.

Alternates to the House are Dick Albert, Tom Bennett, Ruth Dalton, Bob Harrington, Al Isaac, Bill Moore, Lloyd Shaw, Luanne Thornton and Frank Warren.

The Carolina delegation will introduce three bills to the assembly.

The bills for this year are on desegregation in the public schools, a bill in approval of academic freedom, and a bill endorsing the Eisenhower administration.

The first assembly of the State Student Legislature was sponsored in 1936 by Pi Kappa Delta forensic fraternity at State College. This group was more an oratorical society which met annually for debate than a legislative assembly.

In the fall of 1947 the fraternity announced that it had dissolved itself and the legislative assembly. This act resulted in action on the part of the Debate Council here at Chapel Hill in making an all-out effort to revive the group.

After long discussions, representatives from State, Meredith, WC and UNC decided to continue the assembly. In November this nucleus group formed a council and elected Earl Fitzgerald of Carolina, president.

Members to this year's assembly were chosen on the basis of personal interviews with the selection board.

This selection board was headed by Carolina's two members of the Interim Council, Joel Fleishman and Sue Fink.

Men's Honor Council Denies Sending Handbills Elections Board Rules Town Men's Race Valid

Fleishman To Ask Council About Verdict

The Election Board declared yesterday that the Town Men's I Legislature race was valid, and Student Party Chairman Joel Fleishman appealed the decision to the Student Council.

The controversy, which resulted from what the Election Board called a printer's error, arose Tuesday when it was learned that Colin McMillian, a University Party legislative candidate, had been omitted from the ballot.

The Election Board, in announcing its decision yesterday, said that since McMillian did not wish a re-vote, the election was valid.

Fleishman, in contesting the Election Board decision, contended that Election Board Chairman Graham Rights had told him early Tuesday the race would be invalid. "We would have worked to get the vote out. But since Graham told us the election wasn't valid, we didn't," Fleishman said.

Rights said that he did tell Fleishman that, but later learned it was a mistake.

APPEAL TODAY

The Student Council will hear Fleishman's appeal today at 4 o'clock. Fleishman, however, said he would not be able to attend himself and would have to send a representative.

McMillian told Rights Tuesday morning that he would ask for a re-vote, according to the Election Board chairman. Then, after the votes were counted, he changed his mind. Rights said.

The UP won four of the five seats open in Town Men's I in the election; thus party leaders have no desire to re-run the election. On the other hand, the SP is eager to gain a re-vote because it could mean more seats.

In making its decision the Election Board declared:

"Due to a printer's error in the ballot for the Legislature in Town Men's I, Colin McMillian's (UP) name was omitted. This error was not discovered until yesterday's election. This left the election in that district open for contestation (sic) by the candidate whose name was left off the ballot. McMillian said that he did not want to contest the election, and if there was a re-vote in that district, he would withdraw his name from the slate. "However, since there was no contestation (sic) by the candidate in question (McMillian), the Election Board decided by a unanimous decision that the ballot in Tuesday's election in Town Men's I be considered valid and that there were no grounds for a re-vote to be held in that district."

Horace Williams House Is An 8-Sided Shrine

By BARBARA WILLARD

"We don't live in a house, we live in a shrine," Dean Fred Weaver said of his home. It is listed in the phone book as simply 611 E. Franklin St., but it is listed in dozens of other books as a place of historical significance.

This "shrine" once was the home of Horace Williams, who came to Carolina in 1891 as a professor. He had been here as a student and native North Carolinian many times before. Williams returned to his old alma mater to take charge of philosophy and psychology, a brand new field of instruction at the Tar Heel University.

At this time, George T. Winston was president and also occupant of the house that Williams was to make famous.

The house, according to Robert W. Winston, Williams' biographer, was built in 1840 and known for a time as the old Hildreth Smith place. Here Hoke Smith, Secretary of the Interior under Wilson, spent his early days.

It is also said by some that a man named Hedrick built it in 1840. Each person has a different story to tell about the origin. In her Letters, Mrs. Cornelius Phillips Spencer says the house was first built in the shape of a hexagon, but Dean Weaver, being very familiar with the house, says that it was in the shape of an octagon, the reason for this supposedly being that the man who built the house thought that bees were the most advanced civilization, and a symbol of the bee hive should be the strongest form of structure. Each room was built so as to have a fireplace and an outside door.

To appreciate the significance of the house, one must first appreciate Williams. Dean Weaver said of him, "He was not the kind of man everyone loved. He kept livestock in the back yard. He would not connect to the city water supply for years. He lived alone after his wife died. He was a crank, a character.

"When he lived in the house it was a dungeon, but not now. It has all the drawbacks of an old house, but we love it."

"NIGHTMARE"
Winston, in his sons "The one-story, stuccoed house was old and misshapen, a rambling, inconvenient affair on the side of a steep incline. At the bottom of the hill was the famous Roaring Fountain, a spring distant two or three hundred yards from the house. From this spring and up that long incline water for the home must be toted. A more inconvenient dwelling would have been hard to find. In truth it must be said of the old place that for the inconvenience

Leniency Bill Author Called A Bad Sport

By DICK CREED

Herb Browne, Chairman of the Men's Honor Council said yesterday that the council, as an organization, "had nothing to do" with putting out the handbill which Dave Reid this week called "negative slander and propaganda."

And Chuck Hauser, former managing editor of The Daily Tar Heel and author of the handbill, accused Reid of displaying "poor sportsmanship" over the defeat of his leniency bill.

After the elections in which his leniency bill was defeated Tuesday night, Reid said that "one of the most disappointing features of this election was the conduct of some of our opponents on the Honor Council."

He said he was "sorry that they felt it necessary at the 11th hour to lower the tenor of the previously high level campaign."

Said Hauser, "As long as this is his attitude, let him attack me and not the Honor Councils for the anti-leniency bill poster which was circulated the night before elections."

"PERSONAL OPINIONS"
Hauser said that the handbill "expressed the personal opinions of myself and other individuals campaigning against the bill" and that it contained no "negative slander and fabrication."

Browne indicated that he had carried on a personal campaign against Reid's bill for leniency in the case of first offense violators of the Honor System. It was known yesterday that Gordon Forster and several other members of the Men's and Women's Honor Councils had carried on similar campaigns.

"I think that the most important point," said Browne, "is that the Honor Council had nothing to do with putting out the poster."

Browne also thought the handbill contained no "negative slander and fabrication."

According to reports from Hauser and President Tom Creasy, Hauser wrote the handbill and Creasy approved it. Ed McCurry was instrumental in distributing copies about campus.

Hauser had asked interested individuals to help pay for printing costs. Browne said yesterday that he has been asked to contribute, but that he had "not decided" yet whether he would or not.

He said that if he did it would be as "an individual and not as Chairman of the Men's Honor Council."

Following is the text of the handbill:

"Don't undermine the Honor System; don't approve a 'free chest' law which will encourage students to take a chance on the first offense; don't vote for a policy which would let cheaters know they could get away with it—the first time; don't tear down the Carolina way of life by permitting persons who have lied, cheated or stolen to go unpunished, vote no on the referendum for first offense honor violations."
