UP To Decide On New Group

In a called session Tuesday evening, the University Party introduced a resolution, which if approved, will create a "steering committee" for the organization.

The powers of the committee first of its kind for the UP, according to Ken Yarborough, party chairman, "will be to make recommendations to the organizations body and to carry on membership drives."

Due to the slight number of members present for the final UP assembly before Christmas holidays, the resolution was referred to a committee of presidential appointees.

The party also tapped five new members into its fold.

Draft Exams Slated Today

Major General Lewis B. Hershey, National Director of Selective Service, announced October 26 that the fifth series of Selective Service College Qualification Tests will be given today and Thursday, April 21, 1955, at approximately 1,000 examination centers. Chapel Hill will be one of these centers. Col. F. C. Shepard, UNC veteran's advisor, said yesterday.

To be eligible to apply for the Selective Service tests a student must: (1) intend to request deferment as a student; (2) be satisfactorily pursuing a full-time course of instruction; and (3) must not previously have taken the qualification test.

TALK

Don't look now, says the editor, but the nation's saying good things about the old Alma Mater.

Proofreaders

The Daily Tar Heel again needs a couple of proofreaders. Interested persons may contact Editor Charles Kuralt in his office, second floor Graham Memorial, between 2 and 4 p.m. today.

Caravans Becoming Tradition

Football-caravan weekends at UNC will become a tradition, following the precedent set by this year's Maryland weekend. Definite action has been taken toward making this possible by Chancellor Robert House, Asst. Dir. of Admissions Charles Bernard and student body President Tom Creasy, according to an announcement from the three.

Caravan weekend next year will come on the weekend of the Georgia game, Oct. 8. Classes will again be dismissed on Saturday and arrangements will be made as they were this year for a special train and hotel accommodations.

Chancellor House said, "I am happy that this could be made an annual event, and as long as Carolina students continue to conduct themselves as they did this year, the weekend will be a definite feature of the school year."

President Creasy added, "After the success of caravan weekend this year, we began work trying to make it an annual feature and with the help of Chancellor House and Charlie Bernard, it has been agreed that this shall become a permanent part of each new school schedule."

"I feel that the main obstacle has been overcome by clearing the way for this holiday each year. The rest of the arrangements will be minor details."

"The weekend this year was a big success and the excellent conduct shown by Carolina students was a major factor in securing the weekend for next year and future years."

Wrapping Party

The Wesley Foundation is holding a "gift-wrapping" party for anyone on campus who is interested, this Sunday evening.

Admission to the party will be a gift which will go to the Methodist Orphanage in Raleigh for Christmas. The gifts must cost from between 75 cents and $1.

The party will be held at the Methodist Church at 8 p.m. after the Christmas "Cantata" and refreshments will be served.

Alexander Journalist Discovers Dead Fly

Fly swatters, The Ram advises would improve the sanitary methods of Lenoir Hall tremendously. The latest tale of woe recorded by the Alexander Dorm newspaper happened Monday a week ago to no other than one of The Ram's esteemed reporters.

It seems this young man visited Lenoir Hall and was served orange juice topped with a floating fly—dead, says The Ram. This delicacy, instead of filling him with the delight of a gourmet discovery, brought him forth badly shaken, calling for a pest control agent.

Hemingway's Sequel Is A Tar Heel

By BARBARA WILLARD

If Hemingway wants a sequel to his The Old Man and the Sea, he can find new blood for the old fish story right here on the Carolina campus.

A Chi Psi named Zack Waters, from Salisbury, Md., was only 15 years old and weighed 103 lbs. wringing wet when he caught the largest channel bass on record, to break the old world's record by eight lbs.

He and his father were five miles off Cape Charles, Va., in many fishing trips. It was Aug. 5, 1949, and one of the worst storms the Bay can remember was brewing.

All the other boats in the 20-boat fleet had headed for shore, leaving the "Minnie W." Minnie lagged behind the others because Zack had something on the one line he had left in the water.

Zack's father, thinking it was another shark (several had hit that day), told his son to put pressure on the line or to cut it.

"If I had known what it was," Zack said, "I'd have never put the pressure on it that I did. I'd have stayed through the storm and all. I landed him in eight minutes."

It was no shark, but a channel bass. When the fish hit the boat, the anchor hit the deck and the men headed for shore. Even then the storm hit before they reached land. The shallow-draft boat cut across the sand bar, missed a buoy in the harbor by 50 feet and beat all the other boats to shore.

Once home, Zack gutted the fish and took it down to the ice plant. Out of curiosity, he stopped by his uncle's lumber plant to weigh the fish — 75 lbs. Some bystanders remarked that they thought the world's record for channel bass was 75 and one-half lbs.

"I rushed back home to get the entrails to weigh them," Zack continued, "but before I got there, the chickens had eaten some of them. They were in a pan outside. I took what was left and weighed them. They weighed eight lbs."

When he wrote the International Game Fish Assn. for the official world's record, he found that it was 75 and one-half lbs.

He had been fishing in "Deep Hole," a well-known fishing hole in the Bay. In eight minutes, with a 45-lb. test line, in the face of a threatening summer storm, he had pulled in the largest channel bass on record.

WORK REWARDED

There were two contests going on that year, sponsored by Field and Stream and Outdoorsman sports magazines.

Field and Stream presented him a medal and an award savings bond. He got a Nash automobile, set of tires and $100 worth of fishing tackle from Outdoorsman. The reel and line companies whose products he was using when he caught the fish gave him hundreds of dollars' worth of fishing equipment.

Newspapers and magazines all over the world carried the story and pictures. Fishermen everywhere sent their congratulations in letters and telegrams.

Zack is a junior in pre-med at the University, following in his father's footsteps all the way. His father, Dr. Zack Waters, a surgeon, came to UNC. He, like his son, is a hunter and fisherman.

"It was nothing new," Zack said, "We've been fishing since I could walk. But it was something new, a new fish story where the 'big one didn't get away.'"

Astronomer Visits

By CHARLES CHILDS

A world famous astronomer made a short visit to the campus yesterday afternoon.

Dr. Clyde W. Tombough, discoverer of the planet Pluto, made a talk to an astronomy class and visited the Morehead Planetarium.

At the Morehead Planetarium Dr. Tombough said that he was quite impressed by the three dimensional effect of the Christmas pageant and that it was the first time that he had seen that type of effect in a planetarium.

The purpose of Dr. Tombough's visit to this area was to discuss a new project with the Army Office of Ordnance Research whose headquarters are at Duke University. The director of the O.O.R., Dr. Sherwood Githens who graduated here in 1936, accompanied

Dr. Tombough on the tour.

Location of hitherto unknown satellites of the earth is the new project planned by Tombough. This project will involve the location of these "rocks" by scanning the sky with a special camera.

These satellites, Dr. Tombough explained, would have high velocities of about several thousand miles per hour. If these satellites are large enough there is a possibility that they could be used for space platforms. He estimated that this type would have to be about 100 feet wide. Any "house-keeping" on them would depend upon what they had to offer.

The nearest satellite to the earth would be about 500 miles. He said that those nearest the earth

Newspaperman, Connecticut Governor Set For Carroll

A man whose name is known throughout the world for his work as United States Ambassador to India will speak here tonight, under sponsorship of the Carolina Forum.

Chester Bowles will speak at 8 o'clock in Carroll Hall.

A native of Springfield, Mass., Bowles first work with the family newspaper there. His next job was with an advertising agency in New York, after which he formed the firm of Benton and Bowles Inc. in 1929.

His entrance into government service did not come until 1941 although Bowles had early dreamed of a government career. In 1943 he was appointed by President Roosevelt to head the Office of Price Administration. He remained in that capacity until February of 1946 when President Truman named him Director of Economic Stabilization. His term as stabilization director lasted until July of the same year.

Bowles became governor of Connecticut in 1949. When his term was up, he was appointed United States Ambassador to India. In that capacity, he traveled over 60,000 miles, talking with Indian students, businessmen, farmers, factory workers and government officials and worked closely with a Point Four project developed during his term.

Bowles will arrive at the Raleigh-Durham airport today at 4 p.m. and will visit Governor Hodges in Raleigh before coming here. A private dinner will be given in his honor preceding his speech in Carroll Hall, and a reception in Graham Memorial will follow it.

This Is Dr. Hill

DR. REUBEN HILL, above, was supposed to have had his picture in The Daily Tar Heel yesterday. Printer's and night editor's mistakes, however, replaced his cut with that of Dr. Kenneth Brinkhous, who was recently appointed chairman of newly-established National Medical Advisory Council of the Hemophilia Foundation. This is Dr. Hill, who lectured recently at a courtship and marriage discussion, sponsored by the Y.

Music Group To Meet Here On Monday

The December meeting of the Southeastern Chapter of the American Musicological Society will be held at 9 p.m. next Monday, in Room 108, Hill Hall.

Ayyagari L. Rao will give a lecture-demonstration on East Indian music. A graduate student in philosophy, Rao came to Chapel Hill in September, 1953. Besides his duties as teacher of philosophy at the University of Andhra in Southern India, Rao was a frequent performer of Indian classical music in the All-India radio station.

Rao will talk about techniques of composition for Indian music, illustrating the use of the raga and talsin vocal pieces.

Following the program there will be a business meeting with election of officers. Melvin Bernstein, Chapel Hill, will preside.

BAKE SALE

Alpha Gamma Delta will hold bake sale at Electric Appliance Co. today, from 9 until 1 o'clock. Proceeds from the sale will go to the Cerebral Palsy Fund.

LAZY LITERATES

Miss Ruth Price will discuss modern dance at the Lazy Literates meeting today at 4:30 p.m. in the YWCA.

Selden Reads 'Carol' Sunday

Samuel Selden, chairman of the department of dramatic art, will read the beloved classic, "A Christmas Carol," by Charles Dickens, at the Playmakers Theater next Sunday at 8. The reading of this Christmas story has become a tradition with the Carolina Playmakers ever since the custom was initiated by the late Fredrick H. Koch, founder of the Playmakers.

"Prof" Koch gave a total of 278 readings of the story of Scrooge and Tiny Tim, appearing all over the country and including four performances at the famed Town Hall in New York City. After Koch's death, Selden continued the tradition.

Samuel Selden joined the Playmakers staff in 1927, after having been a member of the Yale Playcrafters and a professional actor in New York with the old Provincetown Playhouse at the time Eugene O'Neill was beginning his career there. Selden appeared in many of O'Neill's early plays and was the general stage manager for the touring company of "Desire Under The Elms."

The program will begin promptly at 8 p.m. All students, faculty members and townspeople are cordially invited to attend. Playmakers officials said yesterday.

Health Officer Reports Few 'Garbage Houses'

The Chapel Hill Town Council's ordinance, passed last February, which required all town restaurants, fraternity houses and sororities to erect "garbage houses," has only partially been complied with, Brevitt Hook, district health officer, said yesterday.

Zeta Psi and Kappa Sigma were listed as the only fraternities that had erected the buildings. Construction of a garbage hut behind the Chi Psi house was report near completion. Most of the town restaurants have already met the necessary requirements, Hook said.

The ordinance, first scheduled to go into effect last September, now gives organizations until January 1 to comply with the regulations.

The ordinance specifies a minimum size of 36 square feet, with concrete floors and masonry up to a height of four feet. The garbage houses also require hot water connections and must be rat proof.

When asked if the new regulation would be pushed as the fire escape ordinance was last year, Hook stated, "that would be up to the Health authorities and the police department."
