PAGE TWO

PA

Heat he ł man

ing

Dr

Com

tures Presi

Lecti

If

If

finds

If that specia

1955 find o

If tha

ing

tion

The

is hot

Intim

a boo

low.

rever

Love

beaut

Peter

quota of the

Sonn

Adolf

lor a beth love.

This

Bente

tion r

Cerfu

The Word

beaut

that wortl

as pa can .

The Fruit Of Liberal Learning

It has been our contention, in a discussion of the Business School curriculum that the quality of one's citizenship far transcends in importance the manner in which he seeks to earn his daily bread. We believe the B.A. School's requirement that its students take no more than six liberal arts courses during their last two years of school to be leaning too far the other way.

President Henry W. Wriston of Brown University, in a recent speech at Philadelphia, said it well:

Effective democracy requires a citizenry who will promote our distinctive way of life. Every competent American should have not only training in skills and a growing mastery over nature; in addition he ought to cultivate even more intensively the disciplines of the humanities and the social studies.

Vocational overconcentration cuts down the awareness of other values. The wider one makes his area of informed interest, the morecompetent he is to meet any problem with courage and clarity of mind. If we are to have peace for example, it will come from the application of knowledge, not alone the specialist's knowledge, but that humane, that wise, that temperate outlook which is the fruit of liberal learning. .

Those who regard such things as frills, as merely decorations, as something with which to while away an hour are impoverishing themselves. Students have no more right to squander their intellectual inheritance than to throw money into the streets.

We do not, of course, accuse the Business School's faculty and administration of regarding liberal education as a frill. It is true that the school is among the most liberal arts-minded of the nation's business schools, some of which introduce students to business courses immediately upon entrance as freshmen. And many business professors are themselves concerned with the extreme specialization of juniors and seniors in Carolina's Business School.

But that being true does not erase the other truth: that no business student in the University is exposed as a student to the heights of liberal education that alone can produce sitting in living room. he fully cultivated and responsible citizen.

No Frat Is An Island–II

Carolina Front Cuff Notes On Spaghetti, Campaigning

- Louis Kraar

HEARING THAT campus politicians gather at such august af> fairs as spaghetti suppers, I found myself playing a buck to a smilling Tri - Delt last Sunday night and strolling through the crowded green living room.

My notes for the affair seem to run like this:

"Greeted few Delta Delta Delta's who smiled and said they were glad we had come. Imagined they were since it meant another dollar.

"People, boys in coats and ties and girls in sweaters and other things, sitting, standing, leaning all over everything. Big fire in fireplace, but no one noticed it.

"Passed Ed McCurry on way to get food. Asked him if prospective candidates come to such events. He murmured something about not knowing, then spent ten minutes pointing to his khaki pants. Said he was only one in the whole plush place with khaki pants.

"Noticed McCurry's tie was one of few in the place with pattern instead of stripes though. Didn't say anything because he insisted that he wasn't running for anything and was hungry. "Ate two plates of spaghetti and drank coffee. Both good, but hard to balance on knee while

"Said good-bye to pleasant Tri-Delt at door counting money. On way down street remembered seeing patterned tie like McCurry's in Milton's window. Stopped and studied window on

THE DAILY TAR HEEL

'Ever Listen To The Radio, Comrade?'

Mundy To The Eye Of The Horse Defense Of B. A. School

David Mundy

I am gradually developing an allergy to criticism of the School of Business Administration. It isn't that I have any high regard for the school or any great interest in it: Its mere physical proximity to the chemistry "department" even gives me a pain when I think of it. The "antiliberal education" charge is nonsensical and rapidly becoming even more trite.

Those of the faculty who most frequently levy the charge are, interestingly enough, in the "humanities" and social sciences, or more specifically, in the history and English departments. (Most of the students who take courses in those departments are there for a very simple reason: they are required to take English and history courses. Only two economics and B.A. courses, Ec. 31, 32, are required of any considerable number of under graduates.)

Were the B.A. school to trim its staff a bit, and surrender one of its buildings to an above department, they could fairly effectively bring a halt to such criticisms.

The students from whom the criticisms come present an even more interesting case, Almost to a soul they are majors in one of the humanities, English and history. Desirous of being some sort of educational arbiters, they vow that the B.A. majors are being harmed by being allowed so few free electives. ((They do have to satisfy all the G.C. requirements.)

These poor little B.A. majors, they say, should have a wellrounded education. They should take a large number of courses in the humanities, in the English and history departments. But

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 1953

Roger Will Coe

The Horse sees imperfectly, magnifying some things minimizing others .- Hipporotis circa 500 B.C.

THE HORSE seemed to have something wrong with one of his legs, when I saw him outside The Playmakers' Scene Shoppe, otherwise Caldwell-X

"It's WUMP, not me." The Horse replied with insouciant disregard of good English. "Wump is ailing."

I deplored his lack of good English, I said.

"I have ever deplored it, also," The Horse shrugged, "but whatcha gonna do when they ain't no good English?"

Why, this was terrible. What sort of view was this. Not that I had meant the English people .

"Well, I do mean them." The Horse said, his port forelege continuing to twitch spasmodically. And it is an Erse view of the English. Wasn't it Poor Fitz-Richard who said, 'Shure an' the only good Englishman is a dead Englishman"? Or was that McRichard No ... 't was O'Richard, Oi moind me histhory, th' same which I l'arned at the knee o' me 'great-great-grandmither."

Well, 'The Horse hadn't learned much.

"Aye, it is thrue," The Horse continued in his best Seventeenth of Ireland broguing, "But bad cess to yez if ye blame great-great-grandmither McChree, she who had but wan knee bein' she lost the other foightin' th' Black an' Tans, Slantha wallege!

The English might hear what his views were! "Bedad, an' inny Redcoat is welcome to me Erse view on request," The Horst stated firmly. "T'll meet wid dem, come one, come all, innyplace, mark an exciption: Boyne's Waters. Poor O'Richard said, 'Kape your mouth wet an' your feet dry.' Slantha vallage!

Well, I thought The Horse had something: I knew his mouth would never be damped around water, at all, and doubtless he had scores of forebears yet bleaching their bones under Boyne's Waters!

"Leave us change the subject," The Horse lost interest and brogue with an alacrity which would have amazed Shakespearian professors. "Mr. Wump may have a mild fever. He has been working too hard."

Well, where was Wump, The Horse's specialist on the low-level view of things? And what had Wump to do with 'The Horse's twitching left fore-

"He's under it," The Horse stated, lifting the twitching hoof to reveal his Amphibian colleague all but squashed flat. "See? Looks bad, huh?"

And why not, with The Horse standing on him! "I'm taking his pulse," The Horse stated lof ily. "Mr. Wump, being a cold-blooded creature, very sensibly restricts his heart-beats to a minimal amount calculated to sustain life, otherwise he would freeze to death. Catch? The faster his heart beats, the more cold blood he pumps through his body, and the colder he gets. Right now, his pulse rate is-six!"

way to Dairy Bar

Carolina fraternities and sororities, long looked upon askance by many for their lack of interest in the campus community and the world outside the "house," are mending some bridges.

Item: Last night's Louis Armstrong concert; the sponsoring ATO's could have made a killing for their own pockets from the full house. But all the proceeds went to the polio drive.

Item: The recent Delta Delta Delta spaghetti supper, an annual affair to raise money for University scholarships.

Item: The upcoming Panhellenic workshop, whose keynote speaker has taken as a topic: "Your Responsibility to Your Campus -Chapter and National."

This movement toward group action probably had its beginnings several years ago when campus fraternities transformed their "Hell Week" to "Greek Week"-a mass operation "Help" on community projects.

Campus fraternities and sororities are in for commendation. Their potentiality for good knows no bounds and we hope they'll show even more willingness to accept their fledgling role of altruists to the campus-

The official student publication of the Publications Board of the University of North Carolina,

The Daily Tar Deel

where it is published

daily except Sunday,

Monday and examination and vacation periods and summer second class matter at the post office in

der the Act of March

8, 1879. Subscription rates: mailed, $4 per terms.

Entered as elivered, $6 a year, 3.50 a semester.

Editor	CHARLES KURALT
Managing Editor	FRED POWLEDGE
Associate Editors LOUIS	KRAAR, ED YODER
Business Manager	TOM SHORES
Sports Editor	the second s
News Editor Advertising Manager Circulation Manager Subscription Manager Assistant Business Manager Society Editor Assistant Sports Editor Photographer	Dick Sirkin Jim Kiley John Godley Bill Bob Peel Eleanor Saunders Bob Dillard
NEWS STAFF Ne Ed Myers, Woody Sears, Peg	il Bass, Ruth Dalton, gy Ballard, Sue Quinn

EDITORIAL STAFF Bill O'Sullivan. Tom Spain, David Mundy, Paul Chase

Ray Linker, Al Korshun, SPORTS STAFF

×

THE EDITORSHIP of the Yackety-Yack has become an increasingly technical job.

Thinkers in the field have argued for years that the editor of the annual shouldn't be elected. Latest, and perhaps the best, plan for picking a Yackety-Yack editor that I've heard about came up the other day.

Bob Colbert and present coeditor Cornell Wright suggested a selection board to pick editor of the annual. The board would be composed of the current Yacs editor, two of the elected Publication Board members, and the chairman of the two campus political parties.

This plan seems to merit some discussion and thought, which is why it is presented here.

JOEL Fleishman, who left political glory for the thrill of the stage, tried out for and won a part in the Playmakers upcoming "Show Boat" production. Fleishman, who has held every political party office in the SP at one time or another, is in the chorus.

Chapel Hill, N. C., un-THE MED student friend at my table announced that he was "on call" that afternoon. year, $2.50 a semester; And a coed at the table quipped: "Oh, a call-boy."

KEMP'S RECORD Shop vibrated to the progressive strains of Shearing, Kenton, and Brubeck the other afternoon as students crowded in to listen to jazz

A distinguished - looking gentleman with a beard and cane walked in, looking about at the students listening to music. A salesman approached him, the expectant hope of selling an expensive classical album showing often takes over "states rights" in his eves. "Can I help you " the salesman Adlai Stevenson said. What he asked as salesmen always do. "Yes, do you have a record to be done and if the people of called . |. uh, I think it's called the state refuse to do it ,sooner

'Shake, Rattle, and Roll?'"

Honors For Creative Writers

By Sue Quinn

By next September, if all goes well, Carolina students who are pretty good at creative writing may have a chance to get more hours credit for the writing they do during the school year, have their work criticized by a board of professors, and graduate with honors in the field.

This is all part of a program being formulated by a "Creative Writing Steering Committee," which was appointed last fall by Chancellor Robert B. House. The committee, composed of faculty representatives from the English, Dramatic Arts and Radio, Television and Motion Pictures departments, has been meeting since December, and expects to complete its work by the end of the month.

The plan will then have to be approved by the three departments, the Division of the Humanities and the Board of the College of Arts and Sciences before it can go into effect. Dr. Clifford P. Lyons of the English department, chairman of the committee, seems to think its chances are good. The idea behind the program is to give help and encouragement to undergraduate students who are interested in creative writing, and who can show some proof of ability along this line.

Seniors and possibly juniors

Quote, Unquote

State's Wrong & Washington

Every time we hear somebody say:

"There's too much Federal government . . . We favor state's right . . . Why don't we get Washington out of our affairs and end big government ..." ... We want to ask a question.

The question is: "Will you help foot the billpay more local taxes in order to cut federal taxes?"

Let's face it. The Federal government all too because of "state's wrong," as meant is that where a job needs or later the government moves The salesman promptly filled into the picture and puts its fing-who are judged eligible by the board administering the program would then enter an honors course, in which they would take creative writing courses under at least two different professors. These classes, and the special honors course which would be taken in the student's senior year, could be counted as allied courses, but would not take the place of required major subjects.

'Quarterly' Comment Instead of taking the written and oral examinations required for honors in other fields, participants in this program would meet regularly with the board to discuss their work, and would submit a writing project.

If members of the Carolina Quarterly staff are at all typical of the creative writers on campus, the plan should be successful a-itor of the magazine, puts it findof the biggest problems is finding time to do any writing white you're in school. This way, students could get credit for the time they put in.

As usual, there are some questions that immediately come to mind. For instance, would students in the program be likely to register for too many writing courses (there are six, at the present time), and exclude other courses which they ought to have to give them a broad brokground? Dr. Lyons believes this can be avoided by limiting the number of such courses the student can get credit for in any one seme--

Do Sales Count?

Another problem involves the standards by which work should be judged. Should a student have to sell his stuff before he can receive honors? There seems to be two schools of thought. One is that the public's taste is no valid criterion, and some of the greatest writers weren't even read until after they died.

The other theory is that, no matter how well you write, your material isn't going to do anyone

YOU Said It

Editor: In regard to the announcement of Paul T. Chase's forthcoming blast. I beg leave to quote you the last four lines of T. S. Eliot's poem "The Hollow Men" This is the way the world ends their normal quota of creative industries as public utilities.

how many B.A. courses do the liberal arts majors take? Very few if any.

You will find even fewer of these B.A.-critic majors taking courses in the sciences, once they fulfill their requirements for laboratory courses. They grimace at the thought, say, of a calculus course. Their intellectual capabilities ended with college algebra. Their interests lie in literature or history, just as the B.A. majors' interests lie in the field of business Administration.

According to the theory, every graduate should have a wellrounded education. The usual critics protest that the B.A. majors are getting no such education; but their criterion of such an education is taking courses in their own departments, English and history. Such a criterion is not only invalid; when pressed it is dishonest. As "Farmer Bob" Marlon puts it, "I'm real ma-ad." It is of course desirous that that everyone receive a fairly There are good arguments for well-rounded education. There both points of view. Maybe any should be a large number of student participating in the prohumanities, yes, and perhaps gram could write with the uneven some B.A. courses, in evderstanding that he must try to ery one's schedule.

sell work, but the committee And these semi-pro liberal could still have the final say-so arts critics of the B.A. school in conferring the honors, even should be given some courses to if all the aspiring writer got for "round out" their liberal eduhis masterpiece was a pile of cation, a full dosage of math, rejection slips. Certainly whether chemistry, and physics. Profesor not a student can sell his masional crip-hunters that they terial shouldn't have anything to are, they wouldn't be around do with his getting hours credit next fall. Most of them wouldn't even last a semester.

A

needed arises. Some students feel that a person can get as many The same goes to those critics writing courses as he wants anyof what they term the "creeping way, that the criticism of a anti-intellectual trend." Never board wouldn't be any more helpbefore in history have the memful than the comments of the bers of the academic world, the class and one or two professors intellectuals, been better treated that are available in a course by the society that supports them. such as English 54; that the pcr-Not since the days of Greece son who earns honors doesn't have they been allowed to play really have much anyway, except such a role in politics and govsomething new to brag about. ernment. But faculty conferences in the Yet from a multitude of sources three departments concerned there comes a continuous stream (where the whole idea was born) of dire worrries about the antihave suggested that a faculty intellectual trend. If you bother committee can give the students to identify the sources, you will more thorough and more confind that they are the proponents structive criticism than can a of the all-powerful state. Under the label of "liberalism" they So, barring snags along the propose more government in route, there will soon be a stinibusiness, and in private will even This is the way the world ends ulus to students to do more than advocate nationalization of such What was normal, for Wump.

"I don't know, because he is not a normal Frog." The Horse shrugged. "Not at all normal."

Well then, why take his pulse at all? Besides, was standing on him s.o.p. in Frog Therapy?

"It is one of the unnecessary services I render, being a modern Horse and wishing to keep abreast of Cultoor and Civilization," The Horse said. "And if standing on a Frog is not standard operational procedure, it should be: just where or how would you take a Frog's pulse? He has no wrist.'

How about a leg, then,

"And bruise it, and lessen his market-value as Frog's Legs!" The Horse snapped. "Little wonder you are small potatoes in the money-marts, Roger me bhoy: you just haven't acquired the civilized and cultoored knack of using your friends to the utmost."

Ohhh! Well, how did The Horse plan to use Mr. Neckley, the Giraffe, when he no longer was useful, fhen he no longer could wag his tale of High-Level Views?

"I am somewhat of a fringe-case in the Necking world," The Horse understated magnificently "but as some philosopher said-shure an' was it Poor McRichard now?- You're never to old to yearn.' Had I been blessed with even a modicum of self-interest, I would have done away with Wump and Neckley long ago, when I was in my youth. Man, oh, man!' How was this?

"Well, can you imagine, if I had possessed my= self of my camelopard friend's necking possibilities, and Wump's springy legs to get me around and about? I'd make Rubirosa look like Fauntleroy at an Epworth League ice-cream saturnalial Yes; but-

"Aw, you and your Yes-buts!" The Horse sighed. "Can't a guy dream? Must you always be so sobmatic?'

Sobmatic? Didn't he mean, dogmatic?

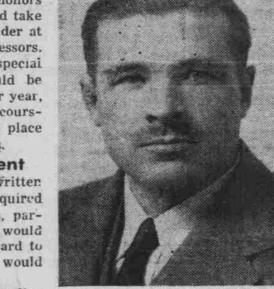

"Being s.o.b.-matic, since you have to have things spelled out for you," The Horse chittered (I hate him when he chitters-), "is being dogmatic in Spades. Really can you imagine me with Neckley's neck and Wump's legs? Can you?"

Not without recourse to Old Stepfather. of something equally deadly, I couldn't! Further, just how Don Juanish would he be, with Wump's cold blood and with Neckley's rubber lips? Ugh!

"True, true," The Horse mused, his eight-balls of eyes clicking thoughtfully. "What would people say of me as I passed? I mean, what would they say that would make me think they were speaking of me, of the real me?"

Well . . . they'd perhaps perhaps comment of that horse's tail that was going by? And what was Horsie doing outside Caldwell-X?

"Oh, I'm showing the lads and lasses how to set up the scenery for Show Boat, our forthcoming Musical to be held in March in Memorial Hall honor of St. Patrick Himself," The Horse stated loudly. "We are the first collegiate group to be allowed to stage the famous Broadway and Hollywood smash-hit, and to make certain it is sensational, I have been requested to supervise the important part of scene-building. I-"

for the courses.

More Creation

or not such a program is really classroom full of students.

Finally the question of whether

DR. CLIFFORD P. LYONS , chairman of Creating Writing Steering Committee

mong students. As Jim Dunn, cdany good until it's bought and printed, and posthumous fame isn't common enough to count

