Legislature's Appropriations Men Seriously Considering Hiking Tuition Rates For Out-Of-State Students At UNC

Student Insurance Program Set To Go Into Effect In Fall

A student insurance program will go into effect next fall, student body President Tom Creasy said yesterday.

The student insurance policies will be carried with the Pilot Life Insurance Company of North Carolina. The cost per student will be $10.20 for 12 months. According to Creasy, the policy will cover all accidents except those of intercollegiate football. "Within the policy," said Creasy, "there is a $200 surgical rider which will take care of operations."

The student body president said letters will be sent to all parents of UNC students during the summer concerning the policies. If they desire to cover their child they will send the application directly to the company.

Creasy said that the policy will cover a student on his way to school next fall and then for the next twelve months. The policy may be renewed each summer until the student graduates.

Work on the student insurance program was begun last spring by the student government, according to Creasy. He said that administration aid was asked, and an advisory committee was set up. The members of the committee were Dr. Hedgpeth, University physician; Fred Weaver, dean of student affairs; James Williams, personnel officer; Frank Schwenker, Julian Price lecturer in life insurance in the School of Business Administration; Rueben Leonard and Creasy.

These companies made bids during November and December, said Creasy, and their agents were interviewed by the advisory committee. After the committee had studied the bids and finished the interviews it decided upon the Pilot Life Insurance Company to receive the bid. Chancellor Robert House approved the committee's decision, said Creasy.

"I think that this one of the finest additions to the entire set-up of the student body," said President Creasy yesterday. "It is something that we have been in need of for many years. I am very happy that it could be accomplished this year," concluded Creasy.

Ridgway Talks Here Monday

Gen. Matthew Ridgway, above, Army Chief of Staff, will speak at 8:30 p.m. Monday in Memorial Hall. General Ridgway is expected to talk on U. S. foreign policy, according to Bob Young, vice-president of the Carolina Forum, student organization which is bringing Ridgway to the campus. Chancellor Robert B. House will introduce the general. After General Ridgway's speech, a reception will be held in the main lounge of Graham Memorial.

the Ballot Box

Campaigning works campaigners down to a frazzle, especially when the campaign is in its last week. Elections will be held Tuesday. Candidates' tempers are short. They have to work, and have very little time in which to work.

Independent presidential candidate Don Fowler was asked yesterday how he liked the correction run in this column. (A previous day's headline incorrectly said he wanted to "Leave Frats to IDC," rather than to the Interfraternity Council.) "Mighty small type," was Fowler's reply.

Charles Ackerman, who quit a job as University Party publicity chairman to help Fowler because "I want to stand behind a student who is a campus man, a gentleman who respects all groups equally and a leader who will associate himself with the ideas of the students, not with a particular segment of the University," has entered the front page before.

In November, Ackerman started a study of the "distinct line of division between fraternities and dormitories." Ackerman said he and other members of his committee (Ackerman announced one member's name before he notified the member) would investigate the "general thought" that the University Party is dominated by fraternity men.

The Wednesday afternoon box score stands like this: Independent Candidate Fowler has made three statements, ranging from disagreeing with another candidate to letting the fraternities alone to favoring a proposed amendment to the student Constitution.

Student Party Candidate Manning Muntzing has five statements to his credit. They include fears that student-owned autos may be banned here, need for return of vending machine profits to dormitories, awareness that the UNC Band's in bad shape and notice that students' dates' ticket prices are too high and something should be done about them.

University Party Candidate Ed McCurdy has made five statements so far, ranging from changes in cut system, closer liaison between students and government and closer work with dormitory residents.—F. P.

No Action Taken Yet, But Discussion Slated Today

By CHUCK HAUSER
Special to The Daily Tar Heel

RALEIGH, March 23 (AP)—The General Assembly's joint Appropriations subcommittee today took under serious consideration the question of raising tuition charges for out-of-state students at the University of North Carolina.

Newspapermen covered the meeting, but they were operating under an agreement that they would not print the names of committee members in their accounts of the day's business.

Group Wants To Cut Library By $25,000

RALEIGH, March 23 (AP)—The Joint Appropriations subcommittee today approved a request by the University of North Carolina to create a new $12,000 a year post of business officer and treasurer for the Consolidated University.

The subcommittee also cut $25,000 a year from the $100,000 a year library budget of the Chapel Hill branch of the University for the next biennium.

In its lengthy afternoon meeting, the subcommittee covered all the budget items for the Consolidated University administration and the entire operation of the University at Chapel Hill. For the most part, it ignored the extensive list of requests which the University made over the recommendations of the Advisory Budget Commission.

The appropriation for the University Library created a lively debate in the subcommittee before its members cut the item $25,000 a year on a standing 11 to 8 vote.

One senator challenged the University's necessity for buying $125,000 worth of books and periodical publications "every year," while another told the group that the University had been "starving" on its library appropriations for past years.

The legislator who made the motion to grant the University's request for the new $12,000 position told the subcommittee he had received "a definite commitment from University officials that they would hire someone from the outside for that job, so no one could say he was playing favorites among the three branches."

The same legislator told the group that the creation of the position would probably save the University a great deal of money in the future. At his insistence, the committee also approved a $3,000 item for the official's secretary.

Press representatives attended the meeting under terms of an agreement that they would not print names of committee members in their reports of committee action.

Homesley In Race For Cheerleader

A fourth candidate for head cheerleader announced yesterday that he intends to raise hell next year if elected.

T. C. "Country" Homesley, junior accounting major from Cherryville, is running as a write-in candidate under the slogan, "UNC Needs T. C."

Homesley, who has never run for any office before, said, "I'm no politician whatsoever. But if Strom can do it, so can I."

Political observers have commented that this is the first write-in campaign ever to be carried on at UNC.

Howard Fogleman, campaign manager, and Layton McCurdy, advisor, announced that Homesley's headquarters will be in the Y.

"I decided to run mostly because I thought spirit was missing in the elections, and because candidates were running for the name of the office rather than for what they could do for the school spirit," Homesley said.

Homesley also observed that spirit has not been sufficiently behind the teams. "I'm tired of just cheering for a winner and kicking a loser."

He said he thinks sports are a vital part of school spirit. "And it's really fallen down lately. Now's the time to build it up because the teams are building."

Fogleman remarked, "I am glad that T. C. is answering the call of the students for more school spirit. It's a pleasure to work with such an enthusiastic personality."

McCurdy added, "I sure am glad to see old T. C. run for head cheerleader. I believe that he is a great man for the job. He may not be an athlete . . . And I want the students to remember to write 'T. C.'"

Fowler Names Fountain To Campaign Post

Jim Fountain was yesterday named by Don Fowler, independent presidential candidate, as his personal campaign coordinator.

Fountain, a senior from Wilmington, is a member of Chi Psi and present head cheerleader.

"I consider it a privilege to offer my support to Don Fowler, whom I consider the most qualified candidate for the presidency," said Fountain in a statement made yesterday.

"Don's qualifications speak for themselves," he continued. "As a student interested in furthering first of all the name of Carolina, I consider it my duty to support Don. As campaign coordinator, I intend to devote my time and efforts to an effective and successful presentation of Don's record and ability to the student body," he said.

Legislature Tonight

The student Legislature will meet tonight at 7:30.

No new bills are expected to be voted upon.

Give Students Part Of Profits, Says McCurdy

"I strongly feel that the student body at large should get at least 25 percent of the campus store fund," said University Party presidential candidate Ed McCurdy in a statement issued yesterday.

McCurdy explained that the campus store fund is taken from vending machines, the Book Exchange, the Y, the Scuttlebutt and other profit organizations.

He said the 25 percent would

The subcommittee took no action on tuition fees today, but they were scheduled to discuss the matter again tomorrow afternoon. Whatever decision they reach must be passed on by the full committee, and then by the Senate and House.

A prominent representative "reluctantly" brought up the question of whether out-of-state students should pay more of their proportionate share of education at the University.

He told the subcommittee that non-North Carolinians attending state-supported schools here exceed Tar Heels going to other states' public institutions by 1,937 students.

Two representatives went on record as favoring an increase in tuition to the point where "out-of-state students are paying their own way." According to figures made available to the group, this would increase tuition for non-Tar Heel students in the University by $310 per year, and in the Medical School by as much as $1,424.

"If we increase the fees," one legislator asked the subcommittee, "will that cut down enrollment? In other words, what will the traffic bear?"

Another member commented: "It's our duty to make the price of higher education reasonable for the boys and girls here in North Carolina; we don't have the same obligation for students from outside the state."

Out-of-state license tags on student-owned cars in Chapel Hill had caught the eyes of at least two members of the committee, and they took them as an indication of prosperity among members of Chapel Hill's non-Tar Heel community.

One representative said he recently visited a state-supported school in South Carolina, and all I saw were South Carolina license plates on the cars. They're taking care of their own children down there, and we should take care of ours."

UP Candidates Hear Exum And McCurdy

University Party candidates met yesterday to hear a pep talk from campaign coordinator Jim Exum and an explanation of the party platform from presidential candidate Ed McCurdy.

Exum emphasized that door-to-door campaigning was the only way to get votes.

Exum announced that campaign expense accounts must be in to the Elections Board by 6 p.m. Monday.

MUNTZING AND FOWLER:

Two Prexy Candidates Take Stands On Negro Question

Two of the three student body presidential candidates yesterday took stands on the question of segregation.

Manning Muntzing, Student Party candidate, and Independent Don Fowler were contacted yesterday. University Party candidate Ed McCurdy could not be found.

The first statement, that of Muntzing, went like this:

"The Supreme Court has ruled on the issue of segregation, and it is now the law of the land. It is a matter which is delicate in nature and one which must be handled with complete diplomacy, so that as few hard feelings as possible will be aroused.

"At the moment, to my knowledge, it is not a problem which faces the University; this is not to say that it will not be a problem.

"At such time as this matter and the admission of Negroes does arise, I hope that the student body and student government will work together to meet the situation, and above all express its opinions on this measure."

Questioned on the matter of segregating Negro students in Steele Dormitory, candidate Muntzing replied that it was a policy laid down by University officials who were more familiar with the matter than he.

Independent candidate Don Fowler had this to say:

"The Supreme Court has abolished segregation. As American citizens we must take cognizance of this fact. However, a question with the broad and sweeping sociological implications of segregation must be studied carefully before any drastic action is taken. As mature students of this University, we must give this problem a great deal of consideration and strive for a solution which will benefit all the citizens of North Carolina."

Fowler's statement on the segregation of Negro graduate students in Steele Dormitory was this:

"It is my personal belief that the problem can be solved only by the housing authorities of the University administration.

"I am confident that the decision reached was made in the best interests of all parties concerned."

McIver Dance Schedule

McIver Dormitory will hold its annual spring dance tomorrow night from 9 until midnight in the dorm's parlor.

The dance will be semi-formal for men, and it will be open to all campus men.

The highlight of the evening will be the presentation of McIver's queen and her two attendants during the intermission. The queen will be crowned by Chancellor Robert B. House. The identities of the queen and her attendants, who were elected by a vote of the dorm's residents, will not be revealed until the dance.

The music for the dance will be provided by a local combo.

Fowler Wants 'Junior Partnership' To Prevail

"I want to see student government elevated to a genuine junior partnership with the University administration," said independent presidential candidate Don Fowler in a statement issued yesterday.

Fowler said, "This is not necessarily an idle wish to be talked about during a political campaign; the realization of the junior partnership idea can, with mature student effort, be attained in a year's time."

He attacked the "lack of effectiveness" of the student government "in dealing with the University administration" as one of its weakest aspects.

"How often," asked Fowler in his statement, "do we see the Legislature pass a resolution and nothing happens?"

The independent candidate said, "We have yet to see South Building change its policy on the strength of a resolution or bill passed by the student Legislature."

Fowler said student government will gain the "respect and council" of the administration "only when its leaders become more aware of their responsibility to the University community." He said that would call for a "reduced emphasis on partisan politics and greater attention to the needs of the student body."
