Presented in an unusual production, "Blood Wedding" will use a setting of stark "forced perspective" in seven colorful and mood-provoking scenes designed by James Riley, technical director of the Playmakers.

The costumes, by Irene Smart Rains, range from the heavy black of mourning to the brilliant party clothes for the festive wedding. Music will be provided, by recording, by two of Spain's greatest guitarists of the past century.

The Big Knife

It's there in executive suites . . . in the gossip columns. . . . on the concert stage . . . at literary wing-dings . . . on TV and radio and in the theatre. And in Hollywood.

Somebody always has The Knife out.

It starts with veiled innuendo. Then the hints grow broader. And then somebody starts naming names. That's when it becomes THE BIG KNIFE . . . and somebody's reputation or career or marriage gets it right between the shoulder blades. Blood never dries on THE BIG KNIFE.
