

Don Fowler Gives Evaluation Of Administration

MIKE VESTER
Body President Don Fowler gave the University a thorough evaluation last night.

His speech was an evaluation of the administrative side of the government. He had the campus under his thumb. He began by giving an anecdote concerned with the length of speeches.

He regretted being elected president because of a handicap, that of not being a unified force behind the administration.

He promised that he had a plan, and that was to get student date tickets out of circulation. He said he had a group of interested students that he would like to talk to.

He said he was going to get a reduced price for the tickets. He said he was going to get a reduced price for the tickets.

He said he was going to get a reduced price for the tickets. He said he was going to get a reduced price for the tickets.

He said he was going to get a reduced price for the tickets. He said he was going to get a reduced price for the tickets.

He said he was going to get a reduced price for the tickets. He said he was going to get a reduced price for the tickets.

He said he was going to get a reduced price for the tickets. He said he was going to get a reduced price for the tickets.

He said he was going to get a reduced price for the tickets. He said he was going to get a reduced price for the tickets.

He said he was going to get a reduced price for the tickets. He said he was going to get a reduced price for the tickets.

He said he was going to get a reduced price for the tickets. He said he was going to get a reduced price for the tickets.

He said he was going to get a reduced price for the tickets. He said he was going to get a reduced price for the tickets.

He said he was going to get a reduced price for the tickets. He said he was going to get a reduced price for the tickets.

He said he was going to get a reduced price for the tickets. He said he was going to get a reduced price for the tickets.

He said he was going to get a reduced price for the tickets. He said he was going to get a reduced price for the tickets.

He said he was going to get a reduced price for the tickets. He said he was going to get a reduced price for the tickets.

He said he was going to get a reduced price for the tickets. He said he was going to get a reduced price for the tickets.

He said he was going to get a reduced price for the tickets. He said he was going to get a reduced price for the tickets.

He said he was going to get a reduced price for the tickets. He said he was going to get a reduced price for the tickets.

He said he was going to get a reduced price for the tickets. He said he was going to get a reduced price for the tickets.

He said he was going to get a reduced price for the tickets. He said he was going to get a reduced price for the tickets.

He has received a great deal of undue criticism from his student newspaper. He has been charged with starting all kinds of events, and even riots, for all I know. But, I think he should get a little praise for the help he has been during this year."

Music By Mozart Will Be Presented Tonight By Combined Groups

Mozart's Requiem and the motet Exultate Jubilate will be performed tonight by combined choral groups and Symphony Orchestra.

The presentation will be held in Hill Hall at 8 o'clock. The Men's Glee Club, the University Mixed Chorus and the Chapel Hill Choral Club will combine for the performance and will be conducted by Dr. Joel Carter, head of the Voice Division of the Music Dept.

Mrs. Jean Carol Vernon, soprano, will be the soloist for the chorus' performance of the motet.

Mrs. Vernon, a senior voice major, is a student of Dr. Carter. She gave a junior recital here last spring and is soprano soloist with the Presbyterian Church here.

Soloists for the Requiem will be Dr. Robert Morris, tenor and assistant professor of voice at Woman's College; Miss Elinor Dorsk, contralto and junior voice major at Woman's College; Miss Donna Patton, soprano and junior voice major at UNC, and Edgar Vom Lehn, bass and instructor of voice and graduate student at UNC.

State Charged With Giving Athletes Housing Priority

RALEIGH, Feb. 20—State College's coordinator of student housing was noncommittal today on a charge by the college's Veterans Association that State gave preferential treatment to athletics in campus housing.

N. B. Watts, the coordinator, referred a reporter to the college's news bureau, which is releasing a statement soon on the controversy.

The controversy broke here last week when the Veterans Association charged that athletics were being moved into Vetville, campus housing development, ahead of 272 other married students on the waiting list.

Six married athletes are being moved out of the old National Youth Administration housing center. The NYA buildings are being abandoned because construction of intramural fields nearby will disrupt water and sewer lines and require extensive grading, according to Dean of Student Affairs J. J. Stewart Jr.

"After considering the cost, the conditions of the buildings at the NYA Center, the decision was made to abandon the NYA project," added the dean.

Housing coordinator Watts said yesterday that the Athletic Department assigned students to the NYA project, and that his office knows nothing about the matter.

Meantime, college authorities have declared that State College is obligated to provide quarters for six students since quarters for which they have been assigned are being abandoned.

The Technician, student newspaper, editorially sided with the Veterans Association, declaring: "Since the Athletic Department obtained permission for the administration to repair 12 units at their expense for their use and since there are only six of them occupied, there evidently have been vacancies in the NYA units this year. Why weren't other married students informed of the vacancies so they could take advantage of them?"

Proceeds from the sale will go to fight cerebral palsy, according to the sorority.

The sale will be held at Electric Construction Co. on E. Franklin St. Cookies, cakes and all sorts of homemade baked foods will be on sale from 11 a.m. until 6 p.m.

The sorority holds a bake every year, according to one of its members. All the food is cooked by coeds.

GM Adds New Truck To Aid In Services

Graham Memorial has acquired a truck to aid it in its services to UNC.

The truck, a 1956 three-fourths ton, dark green Chevrolet pickup, was delivered to GM on February 6.

The new pickup will haul rental equipment and will help perform the catering services needed for GM receptions.

The truck can be hired by organizations of the student body. The basic fee will be $5, plus 10 cents per mile after the first five miles traveled. If used for more than one hour, a fee of $2 will be charged for each additional hour. The truck must be driven by GM staff members at all times.

The pickup will be used primarily for the business of GM, according to a GM staffer.

SAYS MEDICAL SCHOOL GROUP: Hen-Pecking Domineering Aid Ulcers In Later Life

By PETE IVEY

Hen-pecked fathers and domineering mothers contribute to stomach ulcers in the later life of their children.

That is one conclusion coming out of a group therapy project in the UNC Medical School's Department of Psychiatry.

Ten University students with peptic ulcers, dyspepsia or other gastric disturbances of a psychosomatic nature are now beginning the second half of a two-year program seeking to improve their health and to find out facts useful to medical science.

In a preliminary report in New York this month to the American Group Psychotherapy Association, Dr. D. W. Abse and Dr. John W. Fortin of the U.N.C. Psychiatric Center here related results of the new Group-Analytic Psychotherapy technique as developed by Dr. S. H. Foulkes of London. Dr. Abse is a former associate of Dr. Foulkes.

The pilot study group in the University (composed of eight undergraduates and two post-graduates) revealed other indications that an emotional crisis brings on flare-ups in those prone to psychosomatic disturbances.

For instance, the approach of mid-term examinations caused ulcer symptoms to recur. Family misunderstandings and tiffs with other students on the campus also caused setbacks.

Meeting twice a week about an hour and a half at a time for over a year, the students have had over 100 sessions, with marked improvement noted.

Dr. Abse described "Before and After" symptoms: "Before—When the sessions began late in 1954, the students exhibited characteristics of dependency. They were belligerent, rebellious, resentful, and hostile toward certain others in the group, just as they were hostile toward their associates outside and members of their families. Arguments were plentiful. Flying off the handle was a regular occurrence. They resented their mothers, didn't get on well with their fathers and had trouble with their girl friends.

After—At present, the students, though not yet entirely cured, have fewer ulcer attacks. They get along better in the group and outside the group. They have fewer arguments. Trouble with girl friends is less pronounced. Some of them have married. They show less resentment toward their mothers and get along better with their fathers. They are now less dependent, less rebellious, more mature in outlook.

Another of the before-and-after findings relates to the attitude toward the instructor. At first, members of the control group got angry with him, made complaints that he didn't exercise what they considered to be appropriate leadership. They had hoped the instructor would advise them, lecture to them, tell them what to do.

But the kind of leadership actually practiced by the instructor, Dr. Fortin, is essential to the group analytic psychotherapy design as taught by Dr. Foulkes and Dr. Abse. Instead of acting authoritatively, Dr. Fortin tries to generate discussion and keep it going. The conversation is "free floating."

They swap experiences, telling of backgrounds and divulging experiences common to all in the group. Some of them, in recounting personal histories, remind the others that their own difficulties have been similar or identical. This promotes more personal interpretation. Students recognize their own "outbursts," and those in others, as coming from deep-seated resentments that they can interpret to themselves and to others in the group.

Dr. Abse began the experiment, which is patterned on similar projects he has headed in England, in India and in this country.

At the outset, more than 12 months ago, a number of students showing signs of peptic ulcers and other like disturbances in the Student Health Center at the Infirmary were composed of alumni and other friends of the University who contribute to grants-in-aid for worthy athletes. Marshall Cooper of Henderson is president.

Tatum, in his talk, said his staff would concentrate on North Carolina in seeking to bring players here who are qualified scholastically and in other ways.

Approximately 200 of the University's alumni gathered here recently for a reception of the Educational Foundation directors and invited guests, honoring the college's new football coaches.

Head coach Jim Tatum was formally introduced by Caesar Cone of Greensboro, chairman of the Educational Foundation's board of directors.

Educational Foundation Holds Reception For New Coaches

Approximately 200 of the University's alumni gathered here recently for a reception of the Educational Foundation directors and invited guests, honoring the college's new football coaches.

Head coach Jim Tatum was formally introduced by Caesar Cone of Greensboro, chairman of the Educational Foundation's board of directors.

Tatum spoke informally to the group, expressing pleasure at being back at his alma mater. He emphasized that he insisted on the highest scholarship for his football team and pointed to the scholastic record of his players at Maryland.

"We believe in winners because it is good for football players to win, rather than to lose, but you can rest assured that we will never compromise on academics. A player who is not a good student is not a good player."

Emmett Cheek and Ed Kensler were two assistant coaches present. Tatum said the other staff members were "out in the field at work." He referred to Eddie Teague, Pat Patterson, and Fred Tulia. Coach Frank McGuire of the basketball team attended.

Tatum said spring practice would start on March 5 and added that he was looking forward to the challenge offered to him at North Carolina. "We have some fine players, but simply do not have enough of them at present," he added.

Tatum said that North Carolina's alumni were the most loyal and enthusiastic group of alumni he knew of anywhere, mentioning only Michigan as a school with similar support among its alumni.

Chancellor R. B. House was among the guests at the reception. The Educational Foundation is

Dublin Players Coming

The Dublin Players, who television emcee Ed Sullivan has called "one of the finest acting companies that has ever come to this country," will be presented here March 7.

The Irish play group will present George Bernard Shaw's "Pygmalion" in Memorial Hall at 8 p.m.

Their appearance will be sponsored by the Recreation Committee of Graham Memorial Activities Board. Tickets, at $1 and $2, may be purchased at Graham Memorial's information desk and in several downtown stores.

Coeds Treated To A Surprise Serenading

Residents of Alderman and Kenan were treated to a surprise serenade late Saturday night.

An unknown male appeared in front of Alderman with a guitar and serenaded the coeds with Spanish songs. His music brought the girls to the windows. When he ended his serenade, they called to him to come back again.

When questioned concerning the serenader's identity, some of the Alderman coeds said they didn't know who he was, but "he was good."

Others said the serenader was one of a group from the Cosmopolitan Club. The group also sang at Kenan.

Legislature To Pass On Traffic Rules

Student government officials yesterday cleared up any doubts about the powers of the student government Traffic Committee.

All rules made by the committee, it was learned yesterday, will be subject to student Legislature approval.

The distribution between trivial and excessive violations which the committee will make will have to be approved by the Legislature.

Student legislators last week passed a bill expanding the powers of the Traffic Committee. Flagrant violators of parking rules and laws, they agreed, will be denied the right to keep their automobiles on the campus.

79 Morehead Candidates To Be Interviewed Here

Seventy-nine candidates for John Motley Morehead Scholarships have been invited here to be interviewed by the Central Committee of the Morehead Foundation.

Twenty-seven graduates of senior colleges and six graduates of junior colleges in North Carolina will be interviewed by the Central Committee on Feb. 24 and 25.

Thirty-six high school students, and ten out-of-state preparatory school students will be interviewed by the committee on March 3, 5, and 6.

From these candidates the Central Committee will recommend candidates it believes meet the qualifications of Morehead Scholars to the Trustees of the John Motley Morehead Foundation for interview and examination on March 7. The selections made by the Trustees shall be final.

IN THE INFIRMARY

Students in the infirmary yesterday included:

Thomas R. Grimes, William L. Osteen, Jerome M. Gibson, Craig M. White, Christopher G. Crowson, Joseph McK. Bryan, William H. Redding Jr., June H. Stallings Jr., Robert R. Bailey, William B. Akin Jr. and Wade M. Brannan.

A. Group Organize Tomorrow

Organizational meeting of the Democratic Action Group tomorrow night at 8 p.m. in the Woodhouse Room of the Memorial.

For Democratic Action Group of Americans for action. According to the acting head of the group, S.D.A. is "an organization of liberals, dedicated to the fight for freedom and economic security for all people everywhere through education and action."

The group believes that "all forms of totalitarianism, including Communism, are incompatible with the principles of democracy," said Holmes. "In order for an expanding democracy to survive, it must be able to stand against Fascism, Communism and reaction. S.D.A. welcomes members only those who believe in the principles of freedom and democracy."

He urged all students who are interested in these issues to attend the meeting tomorrow night.

Child Guidance Movie To Be Shown To Wives

The Rev. James Cansler will present a movie on child guidance tonight at a meeting of the Student Wives' Club.

Student wives have been invited to attend the meeting, which will be held at 8 p.m. in the Victory Village Nursery.
