By CHUCK HAUSER
He was a blond, sun-burned young man, and he rode into Chapel Hill on an English bicycle. Fastened to the handle bars were a rolled sleeping bag and a portable radio.

stop on the road and tell him where they plan to camp out for the night, and he joins them when he reaches their destination.

Another money-saver is his fraternity membership. There are ATO houses on most major college campuses all over the country, and Dan usually schedules such college stops on his itinerary.

He set off from San Jose on February 1, pedaling south. He went as far as he could go without entering Mexico, then turned east, following roughly the contours of the southern United States.

"Three years of college is a long stretch," he explained to his Alpha Tau Omega fraternity brothers at the local chapter house on East Franklin Street.

One of the most unusual things that has happened to the traveler occurred near Macon, Georgia. There he was picked up by the police and questioned for some time until he proved he wasn't the escaped convict they were looking for.

Former WBT Announcer Was Here To Emcee Yesterday's Festival

By WOODY SEARS
Bob Raiford, controversial radio announcer recently fired from his job with station WBT in Charlotte was in Chapel Hill yesterday to emcee the Festival of Jazz.

Chairman McLean stated that interviews to select the counselors will begin Tuesday and continue throughout next week. He said those applying will be notified by mail when to appear.

With regards to his firing, Raiford said, "It was worth it to me to tell my story. I am not sorry. Maybe I didn't use too much discretion. Several people said that if I didn't like the way things were going why didn't I go buy a farm someplace and get out of it."

LOSS OF INTEGRITY
"I thought about it," he continued, "but I don't want to run away from what I had wanted to become a part of. It would have meant a loss of integrity for me," Raiford said, "and I think it would have hurt the people if I hadn't told my story."

When asked just what that story was, Raiford made this comment. "WBT is heard clearly in most of the states on the eastern coast. I saw an opportunity to go on my regular record program and tell those listeners in Northern states that the actions of a few Southerners must not necessarily be interpreted as the actions or feelings of the majority of Southerners in this particular incident."

According to Raiford, the controversial tape recordings were recordings of the viewpoint of the "man on the street." With reference to the high school principal who called and objected to Raiford's action in talking to teachers in his school, the announcer said, "That was only a small part of it. He was just the one that set the ball in motion."

NO AXE
Raiford said, "If some one called me and told me to kill a story, that would make me want to run it all the more."

"I had no axe to grind," he said, "I just wanted to tell my story."

Speaking of the station, Raiford said he had enjoyed working there, and that it had almost been like one big family. "If they fired me for insubordination, the station was completely justified in their action," he said. "But if they fired me for stating an opinion that they didn't dare go on record with, then I think it is best that we did part company."

Raiford was asked what the reaction to his action had been. He said, "The phone started ringing the moment I went off the air. I wanted to talk to those people all night long, but we had to close the line. Sometimes I had two on the line at once." He said that he didn't get a single unfavorable comment from any of the people who called in. The calls were coming from several different states, Raiford said. "I even got a wire from a ship at sea."

As to plans for the future, Raiford said, "It all happened so quickly that I haven't had time to make any real plans. They give you two weeks pay when you get fired, so I can eat that long anyway. I think I'll just sit tight and see what turns up."

Free Film To Be Presented Here Monday

James Cagney's powerful study of a rabble-rouser who reaches a prominent place in politics, "A Lion Is In The Streets," will be presented free Monday at 7 p.m. in Carroll Hall by the YMCA-Hillel Film Forum.

The movie is a dynamic drama about a back-country champion of the poor who permits his political ambitions to pull him down a dangerously crooked path. The theme of the film, public weakness to noise-making politics, is brought out with pace and vitality.

Vaguely based on the career of Huey Long, the picture offers Cagney in one of his most colorful and significant roles.
