

Is Army Justice American Or Not?

How would you like to have your hand cut off by court order? Far fetched? Perhaps.

Most of the males at UNC are subject to military service. Either they are members of the Reserves (and hence subject to recall in time of national emergency) or have their active military service yet to do. Therefore, we males should have more than a casual academic interest in matters that vitally affect Armed Forces personnel.

On July 15, 1953 the United States Senate ratified the Agreement of Forces of North Atlantic Treaty, commonly referred to as the Status-of-Forces Agreement. This treaty gave NATO countries the right to prosecute American service personnel (as well as civilian personnel accompanying them) for alleged offenses committed while off duty. Subsequent treaties have extended the same right to various other foreign governments.

On the surface this may not seem to involve any great danger to the safeguards afforded us by our heritage of constitutional jurisprudence. But let us stop for a moment and reflect upon this innocuous-sounding agreement and its effect upon us as potential soldiers, sailors and airmen.

Foreign courts shall have the right to try American servicemen for offenses committed while off duty. That doesn't sound so bad, does it? But let's see why it might not sound so good to an American citizen stationed with our Armed Forces overseas.

Most of us are inclined to take for granted such constitutional guarantees as trial by jury, presumption of innocence, assurance against cruel and unusual punishment, etc. It may even come as a shock to some to learn that in most European countries the burden of proof lies with the accused, not with the prosecutor, that trial by jury is a concept almost uniquely confined to Anglo-Saxon jurisprudence and not highly regarded by some of our allies and that the penalty for theft in some countries wherein the Status-of-Forces Agreement is in effect is the lopping off of the hand of the offender.

When a man dons the uniform of the Armed Forces of the United States, he relinquishes some of the liberties associated with civilian status. But he does not lose his American citizenship. Subject to limitations imposed by the Uniform Code of Military Justice, he still maintains his constitutional rights. Among those rights are the ones enumerated above.

The Supreme Court of the United States has promised to review a case involving the Status-of-Forces Agreement. They will thus have the opportunity to decide whether we shall scrap the constitutional rights of our servicemen, thereby denying these rights to those men who are doing the most to safeguard them for us all.

We must draw the line somewhere. We hope that the Supreme Court does not draw it through the constitutional rights of our service personnel stationed abroad.

SUMMER SPOTLIGHT

YM, YW Presidents Work For A Better UNC Life

By PATSY MILLER

"It is really one of the greatest things that ever happened to me"—that is Randy Shelton's opinion of Carolina.

Randy is the type person who "sticks out" in a crowd, both personality and height-wise. In fact, these two elements have been directly responsible for his participation in extra-curricular activities at UNC.

At the present time 23-year-old Randy is serving as president of the YMCA for summer school. He stated that his purpose in the Y is "to draw into the program the graduate level, since half our summer school group are persons who are graduate level. I am trying to organize study and social groups that they can participate in."

Randy, from Winston-Salem, went in the Air Force when he was 17 years old. Then he came to UNC where he has played football for the past two years. His other activities include the Summer School Activities Council and Executive Council and publicity chairman of the Baptist Student Union.

In the fall Randy will function as program chairman on the executive council of the YMCA. He will also participate in the UNC mixed chorus, Cosmopolitan Club, and the First Baptist Church Choir.

In addition to these various activities, Randy now works four hours a day. When the fall semester begins, he will devote most of his time to his studies and his job.

"I know I came to the right place. I feel like I am getting a very good education here," Randy said.

A quiet manner and a soft Southern drawl are characteristic of rising senior Margaret Daughtridge, president of the YWCA for the first session of summer school.

This summer the YWCA and the YMCA have combined their programs and are functioning as a single unit. As a cooperative organization the Y can better fill the needs of its summer curriculum.

Margaret is a sociology major from Rocky Mount. Her permanent position on the YWCA cabinet is conference chairman, "and we are planning two conferences this year instead of one," she enthusiastically injected.

Since she has been at Carolina, Margaret has served on House Council for McIver Dormitory and is a member of the University Party and Alpha Delta Pi sorority. She is recommendations chairman for her sorority.

She transferred from Peace Junior College in Raleigh where she was outstanding in student activities.

Why did she come to Carolina?

"I've always wanted to come here; it is instilled in me. I like the friendly atmosphere, the interesting people you can meet in this place," she said.

"Carolina offers an opportunity to develop your interests in many fields, spiritually and educationally."

Margaret is engaged to a young man from her home town. She isn't sure what her plans are after graduation from WNC. "I'll probably be a plain old housewife."
