Gov. Faubus Yields To Court; Ike To Withdraw U. S. Troops

Little Rock, Ark., Oct. 1 (AP)—Gov. Orval Faubus pledged himself tonight to maintain law and order outside Central High School and not to obstruct integration orders of the federal courts.

In return, Faubus said, President Eisenhower had agreed to return the Arkansas National Guard to his command to withdraw federal troops from Little Rock as soon as practicable.

The peace pact, worked out in Washington earlier in the day, apparently presaged an end to the grave Little Rock crisis over civil rights and states rights.

Faubus would not go beyond the comment contained in a statement issued to newsmen at his mansion here. It read:

Rushes To Sign Slips In Dean's Office Today

The Panhellenic Council announces that all rushes who are signing preferential slips must come by the Dean of Women's office today between 9 a.m. and 1 p.m.

Instructions for signing preferential slips will be supplied by members of the Dean of Women's office.

If for any reason, a rushee cannot go by the office between these hours, she must contact Miss Martha Decker before 1 p.m. today at 5641.

Crack Brigade Of Midshipmen Visits UNC Campus Saturday

One hundred and fifty midshipmen representing the best brigade at Annapolis last year will be on campus here Saturday for UNC's game with Navy.

The group, which will arrive Saturday and be housed somewhere on campus, is being given the trip to Saturday's game as a reward for their performance last year at the U. S. Naval Academy.

The group will sit in a block on the Navy side of the field.

A dance sponsored by the Quarterback Club will honor the midshipmen Saturday at 8 p.m. in the Naval Armory.

The group will not march at halftime; however, the UNC Naval ROTC precision drill teams will perform.

Battalion Commander W. C. Roth will lead cheers for Navy and Carolina before the game.

2 Levels Of Campus Officialdom Meet Arkansas Guard Replaces U.S. Troops

Negroes Unescorted

Little Rock, Ark., Oct. 1 (AP)—Federalized Arkansas National Guardsmen replaced regular Army troops at Central High School today as Gov. Orval E. Faubus still considered the possibility of calling a special legislative session to deal with integration here.

For the first time since the troop-enforced integration began at the school Wednesday, the six Negro girls and three boys walked into the school without a military escort.

Faubus, at a news conference later in the morning, said the guardsmen could no longer be considered national guardsmen.

"They're not the National Guard," he said. "They are U. S. Army Troops."

CHANCELLOR AYCOCK
Confers With Students

Problems Of Students Discussed With Aycock

Student leaders and administrative officials met yesterday in the first of the recently-inaugurated meetings between these two levels of campus officialdom.

The invitation from the Chancellor to attend these meetings was extended to the students in a surprise move last week. This was seen as a step toward keeping the student body more closely abreast of the University's long range planning.

Chancellor Aycock described the meeting as "wholesome and very desirable. The information and discussion was valuable to us as well as to the student representatives. It worked both ways," Aycock said.

Student Body President Sonny Evans said that he was "certain that the coming months will bring forth various discussions from which we will all gain a great deal."

"We should also like to thank Chancellor Aycock for the opportunity of such a worthwhile exchange of ideas," he said.

At the outset of the meeting, Chancellor Aycock clarified the new policy on student participation in the conferences. He explained that student leaders will not be expected to attend every meeting of his cabinet. Instead, they will meet with the cabinet on the first Monday of each month and at any other times upon request.

MAY CALL SESSION

Faubus said he expected to decide "this week or next" on whether to call a special session of the legislature to deal with the integration problem at the school. Talk of such a session began over the weekend but Faubus appeared yesterday to have cooled off on the subject for the time being, at least.

The governor said he had no plans of his own to reach a compromise in the integration crisis here and he did not know how it would end. He said he had talked by phone with Gov. Luther Hodges of North Carolina, one of the four southern governors to meet with President Eisenhower later in the day to discuss integration. He said he expected to hear from Hodges after the meeting. He said the conference would not be binding on him.

Final Arrangements Being Set For Norman Thomas' Speech

Final arrangements have been made to bring Norman Thomas to the campus as the first speaker for the fall of the Carolina Forum, according to Chairman Jim Holmes.

Thomas, six time campaigner for the presidency of the United States on the Socialist ticket, will speak Monday, Oct. 28, at 8:15 p. m. in Carroll Hall.

The public is invited and a reception will be held in Graham Memorial immediately following the speech.

Resigns Commission

MANNING, S. C.—(AP)—State Sen. James Hugh McFaddin of Clarendon County has resigned his commission as an officer in the U. S. Army Reserve because of the presence of federal troops to enforce integration at Central High School in Little Rock, Ark. McFaddin's move followed by only a few days the announcement of South Carolina Gov. George D. Timmerman Jr. that he had resigned his commission from the Navy Reserve in protest of the situation at Little Rock.

New Judge

LITTLE ROCK, Ark.—(AP)—Federal District Judge Roy W. Harper disclosed in St. Louis that he has been assigned temporarily to Little Rock, but he apparently will not sit on the bench on proceedings involving the racial integration case here.

Grady Miller, federal district court clerk here, said that Judge Harper had been assigned to Little Rock to help Judge Ronald N. Davies "clean up a backlog of cases. He will handle all cases except the integration case."

PROBLEMS DISCUSSED

During the hour-and-a-half session in the Chancellor's office the group discussed various student problems as well as the function and hopes for the future of the Chancellor's Cabinet.

Quoting from the inaugural address of Student Body President Evans, Chancellor Aycock told the meeting that "Student Government must present a unified front for the new administrative officials... if we are to continue the respect that is so necessary to achieve."

Aycock added that "we (students and administration) are all working for the same purpose."

TV REPAIRS

The first of the student problems taken up by the group was that of dormitory TV repairs. In the past, it was explained, these sets have remained out of order for extended periods of time.

Administrative officials informed the group that in the future funds for the repair of these sets will be provided from the profits derived from the campus stores (vending machines, Book & Circulating machines, Books, Circulating machines, Books, Circulating machines).

PARKING SITUATION

Parking was also taken up at the meeting. The University's Business Manager Branch explained that weather difficulties have held up construction of the new parking facilities in the Kenan Stadium area. He predicted that, with good weather, these facilities should be available around the middle or latter part of this month.

Evans then pointed out that final decision on who will use the lots can only be decided after the reorganization of all student automobiles. He said this should be around Oct. 15.

UNC Officials Attend Meeting At The University Of Georgia

Two UNC officials, Dr. James Godfrey and Dr. William M. Whyburn, attended the annual meeting of the Southern Association of Land Grant College and State Universities at the University of Georgia in Athens, Sept. 30 through Oct. 2.

Dr. Whyburn, vice-president for graduate studies in research of the Consolidated University represented the Consolidated University while Dr. Godfrey, dean of the UNC faculty, was the official representative of the University.

DATE TICKETS

On the question of lower prices for date tickets to athletic events, Aycock suggested that it might be simpler to work out a solution to this problem two or three years in advance. By way of explanation

THE SOUTH BUILDING BELL—It's something that's part of the Carolina Way of Life, something that leads you to class, something that wakes you up, something that's just as much a party of history as South Building itself.

Bells Have Always Called UNC Students To Class

By JACKIE HAITHCOCK

If peevish are your specialty, the source of your pet one probably lies within the confines of an octagonal tower atop South Building.

"It," of course, is the bell that rings forth from South Building every day 10 minutes before the hour and then again exactly on the hour.

It wouldn't be so bad if this noise maker didn't insist on dragging you out of the sack every morning and causing you to have words with that prof who is a stickler for punctuality.

"MISERY LOVES COMPANY"

If such inconveniences now have you on the point of frustration, there may be some comfort in the old adage "miser loves company."

In the case at hand, the "company" dates back to Feb. 12, 1795, when Hinton James walked 150 miles from Wilmington to enter UNC as the first student in its history.

At that time, the bells literally started ringing and have continued unceasingly through the years to annoy a long train of students in the University's history.

The details have changed, of course. One of the first university bells found its home in a lattice-worked, wooden tower located where the Old Well now stands.

RISE AND SHINE

In those days, the first ringing of the bell in the wee hours marked the rising time for all student and faculty members. The second clang meant that everyone should be snugly seated in his chapel seat. (Chapel attendance was a requirement for all.)

So the schedule ran. A clang for breakfast at 7 a.m.; another for classes to begin at 8 a.m.; one for lunch at 2 p.m. and a final ding-dong for a 6:30 p.m. supper.

TOWER BURNS

By 1856, the sound had become unbearable. One evening a group of students were throwing fireballs made of cloth saturated in alcohol and kerosene and "acci-dently" hit the wooden tower. The lattice work caught fire and the sonorous bell and its wooden confine were completely destroyed.

The silence was short-lived, however. Soon after the bell tower burning, an old-fashioned eight-inch dinner bell made by a Rowan County blacksmith was used to perform the customary bell duties.

This same bell now lies in the vault of the University library.

In 1860, history marked the erection of the present belfry on South Building complete with a new bell. Students, not to be outdone, took revenge by ringing the bell at all hours, causing a general pandemonium.

Phillips Russell, former professor of creative writing at UNC who was living in South Building as a student at the time, recalls that he used to hide the rope to the bell in order to get some sleep.

UNC CLOSES

And so the regular and irregular clanging of the South Building bell continued until after the Civil War. Then came the Reconstruction period that marked another five-year period of silence for the bell and almost complete extinction for the university.

For five years after the war the bell rang only once. Then only to bid farewell to Miss Nancy Hilliard, beloved boarding house mistress to many former students.

On March 20, 1875, however, the Senate passed a bill calling for the reopening of Carolina. Cornelia Phillips Spencer, who had been working for the reopening, got news of the action in a telegram from A. D. Mickle.

She ran up the gravel path to South Building, climbed the stairs to the attic and tugged the bell rope—ringing the message of reopening across the countryside for four miles around.

With the reopening of the University came more bell-ringing pranks that continued their noisy habit until the rope was finally placed inside a metal tube that ran down to the first floor of South Building. Then, until 20 years ago, the bell was rung without incident by a janitor with a dollar watch.

"HORNY-HANDED" HENRY

One of the best-known of these janitor bell-ringers was "Horny-Handed" Henry Smith. Smith's outstanding achievement was probably the gaining of an honorary title from Frank Graham who named him the "Learned Lawyer Dine Dinger."

The time of pranks and honorary bell-ringers came to an end in 1936. During that year, an automatic clock system was installed and a bell-ringer attached that copied the exact sound made when the janitor rang the bell.

So if your frustration becomes unbearable don't go hunting for the nearest janitor or climbing the South Building belfry with fireballs. These phenomena have passed on with history.

You have only two alternatives. Try tranquilizers, or better yet, a little cotton in the ears.
