

NORMAN THOMAS INTERVIEWED

Sputnik Said 'Very Bad' For U.S.

By CURTIS GANS

Russia's firing of Sputnik "was the answer to a Democrat's prayer to counteract the effect of Gov. Faubus", six-time Socialist candidate for president Norman Thomas said in an interview held yesterday in the Carolina Inn.

He said that the ramifications of the satellite in world affairs was "very bad" for the United States. Not only, he said, was this a rather significant scientific achievement, but it allowed the Russians to scrap their sixth Five Year Plan, which would have given the Russian citizen more food and comfort.

Thomas felt that the declaration by some high U. S. officials to the effect that the United States was not in a race with Russia was a "great mistake". He said there obviously was a race for satellite development and the size and scope of the Russian satellite is significant enough to give at least partial proof of Russia's claim to a successful Intercontinental Ballistics Missile. In response to a question about whether he still felt the necessity of an active Socialist party in the United States, Thomas said he still thought the need was there, but at the present it was not feasible to run a candidate.

The problem of how to perpetuate the party when it is unable to run a candidate, Thomas thought, was the most serious question confronting the party.

Asked whether the increasing centralization of industry in the hands of fewer and fewer men and larger and larger corporations would indicate the necessity for federal control of industry, Thomas answered that he thought the situation being created was serious, but he felt that only crucial industries, such as the steel industry, should be brought under any sort of governmental control. "To say that we must subsidize industry in order to keep it small is very bad," Thomas said.

Thomas responded to a question concerning his view on what democracy should be by saying that "for all practical purposes" the American democracy is a good one, but the problem that confront the citizens is to improve upon it within its framework. He added that the people of America must be willing to accept restraints to their "too impulsive actions."

He added that America can no longer be governed by the "town meeting" type of government, but that the American must strive for a satisfactory substitute. He said he favors a limitation of Senate debate, but none so stringent as is placed on the House of Representatives.

He feels he said, that a person's civil rights must not be intruded upon by any consideration of race, creed, color or religion. He added that there was a natural inequality of people due to the nature of their contributions to government in the realm of work—physical and intellectual.

Thomas talked at length about the youth of America in the modern society of today. He said a number of today's youth possesses an "insensate" and purposeless cruelty that was not prevalent in earlier years. He said also that this cuts across economic barriers and destroys the idea that if the state provides adequate housing it will cut down on the incidence of delinquency.

Thomas said he was concerned with the apparent drive in America toward conformity to a type of American perhaps best epitomized in the late Col. Robert McCormick's proclamation, "Be American!" He said perhaps the best illustration of this might be found in a study called "The Organization Man."

At the same time, he said he disliked the current trend in literature toward rebellion for rebellion's sake. He said there were too many "angry men" who are angry for the sake of being angry.

He said part of the current revival of religion was part of this drive toward conformity, and in many respects the "revivals" is social rather than religious.

Thomas added that the drive of populations from cities to suburban areas was responsible for part of the revival. He said the idea of a revival was good on the whole, but cautioned that many Americans do not know what they are reviving.

Stocking Fund To Help Needy

Christmas will again be made happier for many needy families in Orange County this year through the Empty Stocking fund sponsored by the Junior Service League of Chapel Hill.

This fund has provided Christmas boxes for hundreds for families in the area.

The family adoption plan will be followed this year. In accordance with it, participating organizations and individuals choose one or more families and pack boxes for them.

Organization or individual students interested in adopting a family or in contributing in any way to the drive may do so by contacting Mrs. Charles Dixon at 80955. This may be done at any time before December 9.

APO Schedules Meet Tonight

APO, national service fraternity of UNC, will meet tonight at 7:30 in the Rendezvous Room for an extended rush period, according to Ray Montgomery, publicity chairman of APO.

Flu has interrupted the rush program considerably; therefore, Montgomery said that "it is hoped that all members and rushees will be able to attend the final meeting tonight."

Anyone who has had previous scout training and who is interested in finding out more about APO has been invited to attend the meeting.

Doctrine Is Hit

WASHINGTON, Oct. 28.—Army generals took pot shots today at air force Doctrine and what they called "arbitrary" defense department rules curbing the army's role in guided missiles.

They proclaimed, too, that an army weapon now being perfected may provide a defense against the intercontinental ballistic missile.

Preliminaries For Production Will Be Held Tomorrow In GM

Preliminaries to private auditions for the first Petite Dramatique play of the year will be held tomorrow night at 7:30 in Roland Parker, No. 3 of GM.

"Judith", by Jean Giradoux, will be the first production, announced Seamon Gottlieb, producer of the show and chairman of the Petite Dramatique Committee.

Any person who would like to try out, regardless of acting experience or knowledge of the play, is welcome at this open called meeting, Gottlieb said. He added that a copy of the play is in the Information office at GM and interested persons may read the play prior to the meeting.

Persons who are unable to attend tomorrow's meeting may sign up for tryouts on a sheet of paper at the Information office in GM, Gottlieb said.

The play will be performed in the Main Lounge of GM on the night of Dec. 8, according to Gottlieb. He added that Nancy Green, a graduate English student, has been chosen director and will be in charge of tomorrow's meeting.
