Brennan High Man For NCAA Champs

By BILL KING

The Carolina Tar Heels started slow, picked up vicious momentum, then slacked off again and in the process gained their 36th straight basketball victory with a 70-58 victory over the South Carolina Gamecocks in Woolen Gym yesterday.

The slow start was due to the Gamecocks' clever little game of 'hold onto the ball,' the momentum quickened about midway the first half and lasted until midway the second with all the Tar Heels supplying about equal scoring punch, and the slight relapse came in the final ten minutes when the Gamecocks got hot, and the Tar Heels got cold.

That was about the story as Frank McGuire's charges continued to add luster to that fabulous winning streak which started over a year ago. It was the fourth time the Tar Heels have beaten the Gamecocks during the streak.

South Carolina was tough, the Tar Heels were tougher. The North Carolinians grabbed an 11-9 lead with 10:48 left in the first half and never gave it back. But, the boys from the Palmetto State kept fighting back as evidenced in the final 10:48. Carolina held a 53-33 lead with 10:38 remaining, but at 2:53 the scoreboard read 64-55 in favor of the Tar Heels.

Negro Rapes Wake Forest Coach's Wife

WINSTON-SALEM, Dec. 14 — A Negro service station attendant today was charged with raping Mrs. Al DePorter, attractive young wife of the Wake Forest College assistant basketball coach.

Capt. W. R. Burke, chief of Winston-Salem detectives, said Charles Moore Jr., 27, signed a statement "which contained very little difference" from the story related to police by the 25-year-old Mrs. DePorter, whose husband was the captain of the Wake Forest basketball team in 1955-56, as saying Moore had brought the DePorter family car from a service station to their apartment and insisted he drive on the return trip to the station. Mrs. DePorter said the Negro threatened her with a knife and attacked her on a deserted dirt road.

Winston-Salem Police Chief James I. Waller said the chief road in "as isolated section as can be found within the city limits."

Capt. Burke said Mrs. DePorter told them she freed herself and drove to her apartment and a friend notified police. Burke said Moore left on foot, went to a service station where he had been employed previously, and had a friend telephone police he wanted to surrender.

The police captain said through directions provided by Moore, the knife was found about 20 or 30 feet off the dirt road and about 200 feet down the road from where the attack occurred.

Moore, who commutes to his work at the service station here from High Point, made no denial, police said. The rape warrant was signed by Det. Sgt. J. H. Lentz.

Moore was notified immediately and hurried home.

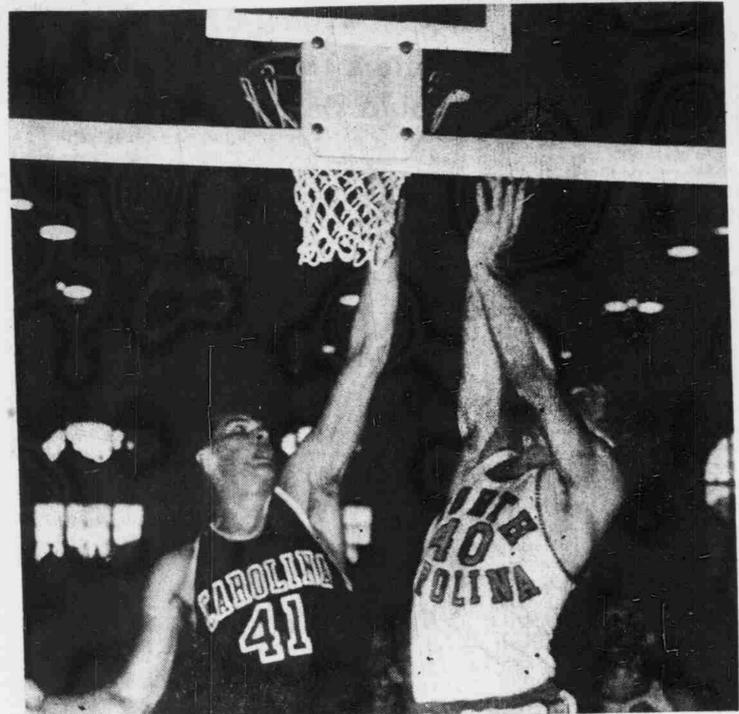

Buckets Of Paint And Them Good Ole Days!

The judge remembered when he was a college student and the rivalry between Carolina and Duke, so he was indulgent with Carolina students caught with a bucket of paint and brush on Woman's College campus.

The judge, William M. Poteat of Municipal-Court, chided the two 17-year-old students for picking Woman's College for their proposed statue painting.

"Why," asked Judge Poteat of William Honeycutt and Richard Martin of Chapel Hill, "didn't you think of taking that paint over to Duke instead of Woman's College?"

The boys remained silent as the judge continued. "... Back when I was a student at Carolina, it was customary, if there was any painting to be done, to do it over at Duke." He then fined the pair $1 and costs each. —THE GREENSBORO DAILY NEWS.

Delegates to the Carolinas-Virginia regional conference of NSA, in passing the readmissions resolution Saturday, said Harding students recently demonstrated their favor of Miss Counts' return when they gave Dr. Frank P. Graham a standing ovation after he had addressed the Harding student body.

Dr. Graham, former president of the University of North Carolina, urged in his address that the Negro girl be allowed to resume her education at Harding High School.

Self Defense Considered By Jury In Its Acquittal Of Buddy Payne

Friday night in the annual mock trial the jury rejected four possible verdicts to return a fifth, that of not guilty, against the state's charge that Buddy Payne did willfully, with malice and aforethought kill Pete Brennan.

The second-degree charge omitted the premeditation requirement and included only malice, which was defined as hate and a condition of mind to take another's life unlawfully.

Manslaughter includes neither malice, nor deliberation but implied accidental killing. This possibility was discarded by the jurors, one of them disclosed after the trial, because it was felt Payne had acted in self defense.

Judge Malcolm Seawell explained the meanings of the possible verdicts to the jurors, and observers feel his charge enabled the jury to return the not guilty verdict.

The state had attempted to prove Payne went to the scene of the killing with a pistol in his pocket to murder Brennan. Testimony from Goll Willingham implied that Payne had threatened both her and Brennan as early as Sunday before the killing.

The defense testimony attempted and apparently did show Payne's threats to Miss Willingham and Brennan were jokingly delivered. In the words of witness Fred Swearingen, "He said them to blow off steam."

Brinnin Speaks Of British As 'Rebels Without A Cause'

"Rebels without a cause is a good name for the angry young men of postwar Britain," said Prof. John Malcolm Brinnin, delivering his lecture on "The New British Poets and the Angry Young Men" Friday night in Gerrard Hall.

"Aside from fighting the class distinctions, these young journalists find it necessary to fight the desire of the average British public for horror in its daily newspapers. On one day, a British newspaper was 95 percent police records on sex crimes. This newspaper has a circulation of seven million," he added.

Several nicknames have been attached to the young writers. "Messiahs of the milk bars," is one. Somerset Maugham put it this way: "I consider them scum."

"The poets are not angry young men. In their quiet rooms they speak softly. They do not make public spectacles of themselves as the angry young men sometimes do," the Prof. asserted.

Important members of this group are Kingsley Amis, Colin Wilson, John Wayne and John Osborne. The tempers of these men turn on three factors: poverty, lack of opportunity and the sense of the war and the hydrogen bomb.

Continuing, he pointed out that the philosophy of these writers is that "it is the young writer's duty to have a profound sense of responsibility, a responsibility to write in a way that will arouse people from satisfaction with the world as it now is." As yet, the angry young men have not written much.

"The poets are of a quieter nature. They have published anthologies, which have served to stimulate interest in contemporary English literature.

"Dylan Thomas was one of the radical poets. The rest are mostly librarians, editors or teachers. They live in or near London, with the exception of a few. They have been graduated from both Oxford and Cambridge and the 'red brick' universities," he concluded.
