Davidson Suggests

A tax deduction write-off on equipment purchases by business firms was suggested as one aid to counteracting the current drop in U. S. economic activity in a talk here this week by Prof. Sidney Davidson.

Davidson, who is professor of accounting at Johns Hopkins University, told a UNC Seminar in Economics and Business how the United States compares with other nations who have made efforts to speed up capital investment.

In a recent study tour of Sweden, Denmark, Holland and England, Professor Davidson observed accelerated depreciation systems in operation. "The United States has less generous provisions in this area than any of these four countries," he commented.

A mild acceleration depreciation allowance which went into effect in 1954 may have contributed to the U. S. economic boom during the past four years," Davidson said. "This move encouraged purchase of capital goods during 1954-57, which means that the current demand for these goods is now lessened."

Discussing the cycles of economic growth and lag, Davidson said that another boom during the 1960's is "almost inevitable." But he also noted the inability of economists to predict such changes accurately "because the purchase of capital goods tends to be 'chunky,' with most companies tending toward one large expansion rather than repeated small purchases."

Davidson was director of research for the American Accounting Association during 1956, and has served as consultant on accounting for governmental agencies. He is the co-author of a basic accounting text, "Fundamentals of Accounting."

DURING SYMPOSIUM

Administrators Urge Student Attendance

The Carolina Symposium on Public Affairs has announced the receipt of a letter signed by Chancellor William B. Aycock, Henry T. Clark, administrator of Health Affairs, and Dean of the Faculty James L. Godfrey. The letter is to encourage professors to stress attendance at Symposium affairs to their students.

It states: "The coming week of March 16-21 is Carolina Symposium Week. The University will have on its campus a large number of distinguished and highly qualified speakers. The Symposium Committee has arranged an impressive and attractive program which will be published in this week's Campus Calendar."

"This week should be a memorable one in the experience of students and faculty, would you be kind enough to encourage your students to attend the sessions and to take part in the program? You are, of course, most cordially invited and it is hoped that by our full participation the University can draw the maximum benefit from the several attractions of the week."

"Needless to say, this must not be construed as a plea for the dismissal of classes. It is an encouragement of participation during the free time of the individual."

The letter was signed by the three administrators and distributed to all faculty members. Students are advised to make their own arrangements with their individual instructors as far as attendance at Symposium affairs are concerned.

Plans for the Y Conference "Tours through the Wilds of Creation" at Camp Bricks have been slightly changed, according to Margaret Daughtridge, co-chairman of the Y Conference Committee.

Instead of beginning today as originally planned, the conference will begin tomorrow at 2:30 p. m., and the cost will now be only $7.50 for meals, room and transportation, and $6.50 if the student does not eat Saturday lunch at the conference.

The day was changed because of the many scheduled tests for Saturday morning which would keep students from going Friday. All students who are planning to go have been urged to register at the Y office by 4 p. m. today.

"The Conference Committee feels that this will be a most exciting conference and will provide a very meaningful experience to all participants," said Margaret Daughtridge.

Jim Carse, a director of the YMCA, will be the leading speaker. He will begin the first session of the conference speaking on "Artistic Creation in the Wilderness of Doubt." This session will be a critical examination of the world through sculpture and contemporary paintings, studied through the showing of slides.

Carse will also be in charge of the concluding session of the conference, "To Find a Home in Ceaseless Creation."

The worship service led by Eve McClatchey after this last session will be the climax of the conference.

Other attractions of the conference will be the reading presentation of "Darkness at Noon" by Koester and the dramatic presentation of "Cry the Beloved Country" by Paton.

Charlie Sloan Lists Opinions On Operating Daily Tar Heel

Charlie Sloan stated yesterday some of his views and qualifications for editor of The Daily Tar Heel. Sloan recently announced he is a candidate for the position.

His policy of news gathering and relations with the staff were the things Sloan elaborated on in his statement. He wants an improved method of campus coverage and a training program for new staffers.

Sloan's statement said in part: "The editor of The Daily Tar Heel is the head of a complex organization. The best editor should be impartial as to what he thinks the best feature in the paper is. He is not editing the paper to suit himself, but to please the entire student body."

"I am not enough of an idealist to think that the entire paper can be molded to fit everybody's tastes, but I do think everyone who reads the paper should be pleased with

Curtis Gans, junior from Waynesville announced his candidacy yesterday for the office of editor of The Daily Tar Heel.

Gans has worked over two years on the paper in the capacities of reporter, columnist, night editor, and proof reader.

Gans said that he felt that the paper ought to be "interesting, educational, and perhaps most of all provocative."

He listed the following plans for the improvement of the student publication:

- 1) EDITORIAL ASPECT: "The editor has a responsibility to facts, and hence the news and editorial ends of the paper must go hand in hand. The editor should sidestep no issues, and should provide a true forum of opinion on the edit page, where all sides of a problem can be presented. "The editor should draw from the resources of the University, including the faculty, students, and library in order to present a more comprehensive view of any particular issue.

"The editor should undertake various studies and investigations into aspects of college life. With the editorship goes the responsibility to print all signed letters.

"There ought to be a more lively make-up on page two. As this is a campus paper, the editor has responsibility to devote at least 50 per cent of his editorial space over a year's period to campus events. He also is charged with the responsibility to put the campus in focus with the rest of the world. Page Two should be a marketplace of ideas and interest.

2) NEWS ASPECT: "Implementation of a stringer system coupled with a news tip system will enable the Tar Heel to more fully cover the campus.

"The Tar Heel ought to have more and varied features on campus life, on student and faculty leaders, on things of historical interest, and on things going on in the university which may not make news stories, but should be contained within the paper. The Tar Heel should cover more fully happenings of smaller groups.

3) SPORTS ASPECT: "The past coverage of sports has been adequate, but intra-murals and minor sports should in the future get more play than they are currently getting.

4) BUSINESS ASPECT: "Circulation of newspapers on campus must be improved so that all people who are currently not getting papers regularly do so. An attempt to get revenue by subscription to the 40,000 living alumni and 7,000 parents, who are currently not even asked whether they want the paper should be undertaken.
