Jurymen Will Be Selected Next Week

The first jurymen to serve on UNC's newly revised Men's Honor Council will be selected next week, according to a statement released yesterday by George Ragsdale, chairman of the council.

A jury of nine students will sit a five-man council in deciding cases involving alleged honor offenses. Seven of these jurors are to be chosen by the student body attorney general from a list of endorsed jurors provided by the Honor System Commission, which will screen applicants.

The remaining four jurors will be chosen by the student body president, subject to approval by the student legislature. However, only two of these jurors will be allowed to sit on any one case. Thus, under the new jury trial system, a defendant would be tried before a jury consisting of nine students. This system was adopted last Thursday night by the Student Legislature.

Chairman Ragsdale urged all interested persons to appear before the Honor Commission to be screened for jury duty.

"I earnestly hope that the student body will accept both the privilege and the challenge that has been presented to them," he said.

The seven jury members chosen by the attorney general will serve for only one session of the honor council. A new seven-member group will be appointed for each following session.

have been satisfied. In commenting on his decision, the current editor said he would have more time "for schlarly work and other areas of the campus in which I am interested" if he did not fill the editor's chair next year.

"Those facts, I feel, are just as important as any service I could render as editor of The Daily Tar Heel," he added.

A member of Zeta Psi fraternity, Eisele began work on the campus newspaper last fall as managing editor. He subsequently won the recall election for editor-in-chief, a post whose term expires with coming spring elections.

Grail Awards Scholarships To Five Here

The Order of the Grail has awarded scholarships to James B. Clay, James Coode, Bruce B. Higginbotham, Vir N. Sharma, and Toby R. Whittle for the 1958 spring semester, according to Grail delegate John H. Kerr III.

Twice yearly the Order of the Grail gives a limited number of scholarships to deserving Carolina students. These scholarships are given in the hope of providing better opportunities for able students who are financially burdened, and who have proved themselves worthy of Grail recognition.

Pre-Medical Society Slates Annual Meet

Alpha Epsilon Delta, the national pre-medical honor society, will hold its 12th national convention at the University of Arkansas, Fayetteville, Ark., March 27-29, according to Frank Farrell, president of the Beta Chapter at UNC.

Five to ten members of the local chapter are expected to attend the weekend affair. Farrell had this comment on UNC's representation. "It is truly a wonderful opportunity for premed and pre-dental students to meet similarly interested students from other school throughout the country. I am hoping that our chapter will have from five to ten boys there, and maybe even win the attendance award given at each convention."

The Arkansas Alpha Chapter will serve as host for this gathering of pre-medical and pre-dental students and educators from 69 chapters throughout the country. Business sessions of the convention will be held Thursday and Friday. A banquet is scheduled for Friday evening when Dr. Walter S. Wiggins, associate secretary of the Council on Medical Education and Hospitals of the American Medical Association, will be guest speaker.

On Saturday, pre-medical and pre-dental advisors and students from the Arkansas area will join with members of the convention for an all day conference on pre-medical and pre-dental education in cooperation with the University of Arkansas Medical Center.

The formal program will be devoted to a symposium on pre-professional education with several nationally known speakers from the medical, dental, and liberal arts colleges. These talks will be followed by panel discussions on the requirements, procedures and details of admission to medical and dental schools. An informal discussion among the students and advisors with the representatives of the admissions committees of professional schools.

Quarterly Announces 8th Awards

The Carolina Quarterly has announced its eighth annual Fiction Awards to be given to writers of the two best stories submitted for its next issue.

Continuing its eight-year-old tradition of rewarding and encouraging literary excellence the Quarterly will present two cash awards to two duly selected winners.

The editors and the Fiction Board will be the judges and their decision will be final; however, the Quarterly reserves the right to withhold the awards in the event there are no stories of sufficient merit.

All entries should be accompanied by a stamped, self-addressed envelope and will not be accepted if postmarked later than midnight, April 1.

All manuscripts should be mailed to: the Carolina Quarterly, Box 1117, Chapel Hill, N. C., or brought to the Quarterly office or Information desk in Graham Memorial.

his or her dormitory that may be worth putting in The Daily Tar Heel is given to the paper.

"The job is not difficult or time consuming. It does not even require the stringer's appearance in the office every day. Most of the material can be phoned in, and if it is a fast developing story, a riot or party raid for instance, regular staffers can be sent to the scene to help the stringer get a full account.

"Campus organizations form another area where coverage can always be improved. Obviously it is not feasible to have a reporter cover the meeting of every club on-campus. Since such organizations are usually glad to have recognition in the paper, it would not be hard to contact the president of each group and suggest the best way of telling the student about the club.

"This includes a short explanation of what such stories should include, who the stories should be submitted to, and should make clear The Daily Tar Heel's deadlines.

"These two suggestions alone could increase the paper's coverage of the campus to a point rarely reached by college newspapers on campuses the size of Carolina.

Bandmasters' Organization Selects Fred

Herbert W. Fred, director of bands at Carolina, has been elected to membership in the American Bandmasters Association, an organization for representatives of various band fields.

Selection of Fred was made at the recent annual meeting held at the University of Illinois. The Association was formally organized in 1929 by John Philip Sousa and Edwin Franko Goldman to recognize selected bandmasters who have achieved more than local prominence and who are known for their professional leadership.

The present membership consists of a balanced representation from the various band fields-professional, municipal and industrial, university, college, high school and armed forces bands.

Four other North Carolinians are active members of the association: Earl Slocum, Chapel Hill; James C. Harper, Lenoir; Herbert Hazelman, Greensboro and James Pfohl, Brevard.

Independents Must File By March 22

All independent candidates for spring election must file in the Student Government office by March 22, according to Elections Board Chairman Bob Furtado.

Any candidate for Student Council, Women's or Men's Honor Council or editor of the Daily Tar Heel must be screened by the Bi-Partisan Selections Board and must file for election by March 19.

The editorial selection board will meet Monday at 2 p. m. in the Grail Room. Women's Honor Council selections board will meet from 3 to 7 p. m. Wednesday in GM's Woodhouse Conference Room, and candidates for Men's Honor Council and Student Council will be interviewed Monday and Tuesday from 3 to 4:30 p. m. in the Council Room in GM.

"Being editor of my high school paper, also gave me added experience," Gans stated.

"An editorial candidate must have a broader perspective of the campus so that he is able to realize some of the many opportunities for news.

"At present, I am chairman of the Free Film Committee of GMAB, a member of the executive board of GMAB, a member of the Student-Faculty Forum Committee, a mem-

Planetarium Feature Using 73 Projectors

Seventy-three projectors — the greatest number ever to pull electric current in a Morehead Planetarium production—are being used in "Easter, the Awakening."

The projectors and their lighting in the annual tribute to Easter would draw a total of almost 25,000 watts if all were used simultaneously.

That astounding electrical figure is exclusive of eight motors, the sound system, and lighting not used in the show. Nor does it include the 35watts Precipitron, which does run for a solid hour and a half during each performance.

The Precipitron is the machine which keeps the audience unaware that it is viewing projections on the stainless steel dome.

ternities, dormitories, traffic and parking, athletics Cut System, student finances, National Student Association, discriminatory clauses, student responsibility to administration and faculty and the need for liaison between the campus and the Chapel Hill community.

The last independent candidate to win the office of president was Donald Fowler in 1955.

Carter, besides being student body treasurer, is a Morehead scholar, vice president of the IDC and a member of the Grail.

Earlier this week Don Furtado (Student Party) and Al Goldsmith (University Party) entered the contest for the top student position.

"Perhaps one of the most important committees that I have been a member of is the Newspaper Research, which gave me a chance to see what other college papers in the country were like. Many improvements for The Daily Tar Heel were fostered by membership in this committee."

"I feel that with the experience that I have had, and the awareness of what is going on the campus, that I will be able to put out the best newspaper of any college in the United States," Gans stated.

Grad Awards For Students Slated Here

The Institute of International Education has announced a new program of Fulbright awards for graduate study in Ireland.

It is expected that three awards, for which application must be made by April 15, will be given for the academic year 1958-59.

Application forms and additional information may be received from the campus Fulbright adviser, Frank M. Duffey, 211 Murphey Hall.

Local Mayor Proclaims Special Week

Oliver K. Cornwell, Mayor of Chapel Hill, has urged by proclamation that the people of Chapel Hill observe National Library Week March 16-22.

This week, the Mayor said, is being recognized nationally for the first time. All citizens are being asked to take part in a campaign to develop a 'better-read, better-informed America.'

"I believe it would be well for us as individuals to pause for a moment and recognize the importance of books in our modern world," Mayor Cornwell said. "Nothing not moving pictures, not radio, not television, can take the place of the printed word."

The Mayor called the freedom to read, and to read anything we choose, one of democracy's most cherished liberties. "Let us all exercise this freedom," he said.

Mayor Cornwell said he had issued the proclamation so that "the people of the Chapel Hill community may have some small share in this movement to revive and improve our nation's reading habits."
