

Candidate Ann Frye Outlines Plans For Tar Heel Reportorial Staffing

Ann Frye, candidate for editor of The Daily Tar Heel, issued a statement Friday in which she discussed the reportorial organization of the newspaper.

"The Daily Tar Heel at the present time offers no salary to its reporters, and the reporters are the 'backbone' of the paper. Since they represent the foundation of the Tar Heel, the editor must meet two problems pertaining to them: keeping the staff interested enough to stay on the paper without pay and teaching them principles of good journalism.

"In the first place, as I have noted this year, there are two types of individuals who will stay on the Tar Heel staff all year: those who are interested in obtaining an executive position or those few who are genuinely interested in getting all the experience possible prior to a career in journalism. These represent only a few persons, however.

Turnover

"Other staff members come from journalism classes that require three weeks work on the Tar Heel. Some of these people stay on longer, but usually there is a regular turnover every three weeks.

"The first type of staffer will stay on without pay during the year, but the second type, as I have indicated, usually will not. To keep more people on the staff, I can see only one possible practical solution: that is, that these people be given news assignments which challenge their ability and, when completed, give them the satisfaction of real achievements. The carrying out of this solution rests with a good editor whose judgment would lead him, among other things, to appoint a good, alert news editor.

Journalism Students

"I am in Journalism School and understand the attitude of those persons in news writing courses who are under the three weeks Tar Heel work requirement. In my capacity as assistant news editor, I met these people and saw their indifference to the Tar Heel upon being assigned uninteresting and minor news articles.

"If elected editor, I feel that I have had the contact with the staff retention problem to try this one practical solution I can see.

"The Tar Heel would be useless if the people working for it did not get as much out of it as they put into it. The staff should learn something from their work on the Tar Heel.

Whitley Names Myers Head Of Campaign

John Whitley candidate for editor of The Daily Tar Heel, announced Friday that Bob Myers, senior journalism major associated with the Sports Publicity Department, will be his manager for the campaign.

Whitley said that he regretted that the Bi-Partisan Selections Board had not endorsed him as a candidate for The Daily Tar Heel editorship, but he did not look upon his not having worked on the staff as a serious handicap.

He added:

"I regret that the Editorial Selections Board did not choose to endorse me as a candidate for the editorship of The Daily Tar Heel because of the fact that I had not been a staff member of the campus newspaper.

"Although I regard the board as qualified to judge editorial candidates, I feel I am qualified to give the student body the top-notch paper which it deserves considering my other experience."

Not Serious Drawback

Whitley said that he did not look upon not having worked on the staff as a serious drawback. "In my other experience, which includes three years in publication work and four years in the printing industry," continued Whitley, "I worked one year as a part-time rewrite man for the High Point Enterprise, during which time I became well acquainted with the city daily system.

"Actually the campus newspaper employs a system very similar to the above-mentioned, and rightly so," he added, "for the staff members of the Tar Heel very shortly will be seeking positions with larger newspapers, and the experience gained here will be invaluable to them."

Should Be Energetic

Whitley pointed out that he thought a capable editor should be energetic and be well acquainted even with the smallest element in the operations. He added, however, that the editor should not dominate the newspaper to such an extent as to antagonize staff members.

"The editor should remember at all times," stated Whitley, "that one major purpose of the campus newspaper is to offer an opportunity for students interested in journalism to apply their knowledge to practical working situations, and that harmony in the front office provides for a better newspaper."

Gans: DTH Editor Should Provoke Thought Here

Curtis Gans, candidate for editor of The Daily Tar Heel, announced yesterday that he felt that the editorial page of The Daily Tar Heel "ought to provoke opinion."

Gans added, "A newspaper can provoke opinions without being irresponsible. Any newspaper has a responsibility to the facts, and an editor need not create controversy, since there are many controversies latent in the University right now."

"One has only to look at the student aid situation, the low faculty salaries, the rising cost of room rent, the ultra-slow progress towards a coliseum-armory, the lack of foresight with regard to married student housing, the high prices in Chapel Hill, the slowly decreasing status of the UNC library, and some social regulations, to realize that there are plenty of controversies latent in UNC.

Editor's Responsibility

"The editor has a responsibility to comment on these. He has a responsibility to bring out the facts of these situations, and to try and stimulate student participation in the newspaper."

"The editorial policies must be based on fact, and hence the news department of the paper should undertake studies on various aspects of campus life."

"The editor also has a responsibility of placing the UNC campus in its perspective with the world. He must bring the UNC campus up to date on major developments on the national and international scene."

World News

"However, the newspaper is primarily a student paper and should not be cluttered up with international news, when there is plenty of news on campus.

"The best policy to have with national and international news is to print only that international news that has a chance to be treated editorially."

"Moreover, the editor should not devote more than 50 per cent of his editorial columns throughout the year to international news. His primary function is to cover the campus adequately."

"The Daily Tar Heel can be an interesting and provocative newspaper without being irresponsible. I feel I can make The Daily Tar Heel this type of paper—the best college paper."

The group took Nick Kerns and his combo along to entertain them during the trip. Dick Stoker, Johnny Lomax and Hoke Simpson went along to help Nick liven up the festivities with a few of the latest "rock and roll" hits.

Friday night the group held a ship wreck party in the beach pavilion where pirate, nautical, middy, and calypso costumes pervaded the atmosphere.

Chaperones for the events were Mrs. James B. Connell of Henderson; Mr. and Mrs. Nick Kerns of Chapel Hill; Mr. and Mrs. Freddy Bardin of Wilson; and Mr. and Mrs. Harold McCain of Raleigh.

World In Brief

snow damage was the worst in 40 years. The area was placed under a state of emergency as the storm cut everyday life to a crawl.

More than 40 deaths were attributed to the storm in eight eastern states. Victims died of heart attacks, exposure, electrocution and traffic accidents.

Government weather forecasters, caught short in advance predictions of the storm's severity, were hopeful it would blow itself out over the Gulf of Mexico by Saturday.

More than 1½ million homes and business establishments were without electricity from Virginia to Maine. Many were without heat, lights, cooking facilities, radios, elevators and other electrical devices.
