Poet Frost Patiently Pens His Name

By MARY STEWART BAKER
Heavy eyelids seemed to creep over still-alert eyes. He was hungry too; he hadn't had any supper. Friends and admirers, both instructors and students, quietly milled in and out of the small dressing room. He was seated there behind a small table signing his name again and again.

Someone said that the lyric result of his broad pointed pen was poetic too.

He wouldn't sign anything but his books or fragments of his works. Eager followers even scratched out his shorter poems on scraps of paper to obtain the signature, Robert Frost.

He patiently signed his name more than 30 times. Finally he spoke with those who wished to once again hear the firm, crusty voice—the twinkling wisdom—that has awed the Chapel Hill audience for 14 yearly appearances.

He pulled a chair close beside him for the few inquirers. He bent over slightly in that direction and explicitly demanded loud tones; his hearing is fading fast, he said.

The words he spoke were loud too; they were well thought out and precise—some, repetitions of the evening's program.

Frost explained that although he has never taken any ideas for his poetry from Chapel Hill, he perhaps might have taken ideas from people related to the area. He then re-emphasized the importance of large universities and the greatness that lies behind their bigness.

"Don't these two go together?" He asked in reply.

Representatives from the Carolina Quarterly, who had recorded

Frost's every word by shorthand, sought his permission to use the evening's material in the next issue of the magazine. The poet suggested that only fragments be used; he requested that the business be channeled through his manager.

With respect and thoughtfulness for the 85-year-old poet, the crowd began to thin as Frost answered a final question about his ability to remember his works for recitation.

"I know many of them by memory," he said, "but I have my book right there—and recite what I feel like and know."

He also added that if somehow all his works disappeared, he would probably be able to remember more than he thinks himself capable of recalling now.

"Robert Frost . . . your work will never disappear," someone was heard to say.

Sanford Discusses Issues With UNC Young Democrats

By DAVE JONES

"There is no place in this campaign for making 'all downs' an issue," said Terry Sanford last night at a meeting of the university's Young Democratic Club.

"Men and women of good will of this state are working to solve this problem. I can't solve it now, I can only muddy up the water by discussing it here," he continued.

On other issues the candidate was more explicit. He said of education that he had a program which included a "realistic admission that more money will be needed, and it includes the promise that I have the courage to go to the General Assembly and ask for it."

On industry Sanford said "Specifically, I have proposed that the industry hunting division of the Department of Conservation and Development be separated and made directly responsible to the Governor so that increased attention might be given this vital program."

On the subject of labor relations Sanford said "If I am elected the right to work law will not be repealed." In discussion after the speech, he gave his stand on the minimum wage law. He said that he had voted, in 1953, for a liberal bill which passed the Senate but not the house.

He said that he also felt that the bill should be broadened and that it should be raised from time to time to make it more meaningful.

When asked about a state wide liquor referendum, Sanford said that many Governors and candidates for Governor in the past have asked for referendums but that none has ever passed either house of the General Assembly. He said that his thought on alcohol and alcoholic control covered more than the referendum, and that he would have a complete statement later. It would include, he said his feelings on rehabilitation of alcoholics and other problems.

The candidate added to his platform form two planks on the campaign itself. He discussed campaign money and the value of small contributions, and he made a statement on ethics.

"I have too high a regard for the office of Governor of North Carolina to degrade it by seeking it through smears, falsehoods, and appeal to prejudice."

"We will call a spade a spade," he continued, "but we will not use it to dig up spooks or to cover up the true issues."

Sanford spoke to an audience of about 100 students and townspeople who braved the storms and ignored Shakespeare playing next door. Student Body president Charlie Gray welcomed the candidate and the guests with a very brief speech.

New Student Union Top Objective Of Sevier

The acquisition of a new Student Union, the improvement of social and study facilities in the dorms, better communication between students and their leaders, and continued support of the Honor System are objectives stated by Bob Sevier, University Party candidate for Student Body Vice President.

"I hold the acquisition of a new Student Union first among my objectives," said Sevier, "I feel that it is the entire student body's greatest need. We need office space for union activities, areas for recreation, a snack bar, hi-fi rooms and 'elbow room' for a growing student government."

The vice presidential candidate said that he has lived in a dormitory for the past two years, and he feels that "We cannot relax our efforts toward acquiring improvements in respect to social and study facilities in the dorms."

Got An Irish Name? Then Head For Rat

Is your name Casey, Sullivan, Shaughnessy, O'Donahue, Reily, McNamara, O'Leary, Rooney, Kelly, Kilpatrick, McCarty, Brennan, O'Brien, or any other name of Irish descent?

If so the Rathskeller will help you celebrate St. Patrick's Day today by giving you one free glass of Irish beer.

If you don't have an Irish name, but can prove your Irish ancestry, the "Rat" will provide also one beer on the house.

"Progress in this area has been made recently, but we cannot afford to slacken our interest because the dorm residents deserve the very best that can be acquired for them," continued Sevier.

"Our judicial system is an important cornerstone of the student government structure. We must not let it deteriorate. I will work to maintain student interest in our Honor System and the Administration's confidence in our judicial branch.

"This will mean concentrated work with the legislature and the new president, as we implement new concepts and procedures as smoothly and with as much student body participation as possible," said Sevier.

"The Vice President plays two important roles under our Constitution. He is at one and the same time the first assistant to the president in the executive branch, and the speaker in the legislature," explained the candidate.

"With this dual role comes an important responsibility, that of liaison between the man who executes our campus laws and the men and women who make them in the name of all the students.

"As speaker of the legislature, I would strive always to keep the business of government moving smoothly and give each point of view a chance to be heard.

"In respect to problems that may come up that cannot be foreseen now, my promise is to apply the judgments that are the product of my student government experience and my life at Carolina."
