Spring Brings Younger Ones

By MARY ALICE ROWLETTE

A Spring Saturday seems to bring the youngest of the younger generation to Chapel Hill in hordes comparable to politicians descending on a church supper.

They stand in line at the Planetarium, test the Morehead Sun Dial for sliding board purposes, scatter over the aboretum and, if an adult doesn't stop them, they're not above picking a flower or two.

They eat hamburgers, french fries and drink cokes, buy dime store hats and take pictures of each other.

The little girls look hopefully at the little boys, hoping they will sit next to them on the bus ride home and the little boys whistle at the coeds and then wonder what to do.

And the chaperones who have somehow been suckered into accompanying them, grit their teeth, try to keep their voices quiet as they ask Johnny for the zillionth time to please stay in line and tell Susie that she can get a drink of water in just a minute. All the time they are hoping that at least a few of the children will gain just a tiny bit of the education the trip was supposed to provide.

Yesterday seemed to be the peak of the young tourist season in Chapel Hill with nearly 300 children and adults touring the campus and Chapel Hill.

The two largest groups were both from Greensboro churches—the Presbyterian Church of the Covenant, with C. E. MacIntosh of Chapel Hill as their guide and the Muires Chapel Church, with Miss Laura Ingram as chief chaperone. The groups number 50 and 65, respectively.

The sun set and the kids went home with their dime store hats and many tall tales and the weary chaperones counted noses, sighed with relief that they still had the same number of responsibilities they'd started with and wondered just whose idea the whole thing had been, anyway.

Women Have Press Future Boyle Asserts

There is plenty of room for women in journalism, Associated Press columnist Hal Boyle told the North Carolina Women's Press Institute here last night.

Boyle told women they have opportunities on the woman's pages, in general human interest writing and in columns.

The columnist, who began his career as an AP copy boy when he was 17-years old, was the main speaker at a dinner meeting held in the Carolina Inn.

Celebrities are not easy people to interview, he said. "I had rather interview children and hermits. They have something of wonder and surprise left in them."

Women are also a special case in interviews. "They are more cautious about what they say, and at the same time they seem to speak more freely."

Miss Dorothy Presser, assistant secretary to the National Federation of Young Republicans, will address UNC students and Chapel Hill townspeople Tuesday, 8:00 p.m., in the Law School Courtroom.

Miss Presser, a native of Charlotte, is active in the North Carolina Republican Party, and is currently assistant secretary to the state GOP and also coordinator of Club Activities for the North Carolina Federation of Young Republicans.

Warren H. Coolidge President of the UNC Young Republicans Club, which is sponsoring Miss Presser, extends a cordial invitation to all interested students and townspeople to attend and to take part in the question and answer period which will follow Miss Presser's address.

Valkyries Sing After Fleece Tapping Sunday

Himes Elected Council Head Prizes To Be Awarded To Top Singers, Skits

Charles F. Himes was elected chairman of the Professional Interfraternity Council at the organization's meeting last week. He succeeds Erwin Fuller, who graduates this June.

Other officers elected are: Bill Floyd, vice chairman; Larry Medford, secretary; and Mack Jones, treasurer.

Past Chairman Fuller discussed the accomplishments of the Council during the past year and made suggestions for future projects. Under Fuller's chairmanship a new constitution was drawn up and adopted by the four fraternities.

The four fraternities in the Council are Delta Sigma Pi, Alpha Kappa Psi, Phi Delta Chi, and Kappa Psi.

Tomorrow night at 7 p.m. the doors of Memorial Hall will be locked, marking the beginning of this year's Order of the Golden Fleece tapping and Valkyrie Sing.

First on the agenda will be the Fleece tapping, which will take place in a completely darkened auditorium. A single spotlight will pierce the darkness, flickering over the audience to single out those men who have been chosen for the Order, considered U.N.C.'s highest honorific for men.

Golden Fleece initiates are chosen on the basis of character, ability, achievement and leadership. The Fleece has a longstanding tradition of recognizing the campus' most distinguished men.

Following the Fleece tapping the Valkyries will introduce the evening's entertainment, to be given by representatives from organizations throughout the campus.

Six trophies will be awarded for both singing attractions and skits. The event is open to both dormitory and fraternity-sorority areas. Trophies are given according to areas, and according to the type of presentation.

For the first time the Sing will be joined by the Cosmopolitan Club, which will attempt to win a trophy in its initial participation in the traditional event.

The Valkyries, the University's leading coed honorary, present this event in order to display campus talent and to "serve as a unifying force with emphasis on group participation and enjoyment," according to Frances Reynolds, Sing chairman.

The participants have practiced for the last two or three weeks, and turned in scripts to the Valkyries recently.

Former Opera Singer To Dedicate Program

Norman Cordon, former basso profundo of the Metropolitan Opera who sang for a decade with the late Leonard Warren, will dedicate a special program to Warren's memory on WUNC-FM.

It will be broadcast Sunday, April 10, at 8 p.m.

"A Tribute to Leonard Warren," which Cordon is presenting "out of personal friendship and deep respect," will feature recordings of concerts Warren did a few years ago on a cultural exchange tour of Russia.

Warren and Cordon first appeared together in "Lohengrin," later in "Faust," "Rigoletto" and other operas. Cordon sang the lead in "Lohengrin" and Warren had the minor role of the king's herald. "He made a secondary part into a major one," Cordon recalls.

They also performed together for two seasons at the Teatro Colon in Argentina.

Cordon, Warren and Soprano Eleanor Steber were contracted by RCA Victor Records in 1938 to record "Highlights of Great Operas."

"It is my great sorrow that he died, and at the height of his career," Cordon says. "He had the most astounding voice I have ever heard."

Warren gave a concert here last season for the Chapel Hill Concert Series.

When Mr. Caldwell arrived at the University there was no office of President. He was made President Professor for the spring term 1797. The responsibilities of acting president, combined with that of teaching, were so heavy that he declared his intention of leaving the University, but was persuaded to stay upon the election of Mr. James Smiley Gillespie as presiding professor at the close of 1797. In two short years Mr. Gillespie was beaten by the students because they didn't like him. He resigned and Mr. Caldwell was elected to succeed him in 1799.

There were four other professors besides Mr. Caldwell, and about fifty-six students. These ranged in age from young boys to young men who were so poorly prepared for college that a grammar school had to be organized, where corporal punishment was administered when the lessons were not learned.

There were only fourteen bedrooms in Old East. Six students were crammed into a room with their trunks, beds, tables, chairs, books and clothes. "which by the excessive heat of summer was enough to stifle them, and in the BABY BRAIN — UNC has not one, but two Univacs. The Univac 1105, giant electronic brain weighing 19 tons, is in Phillips Hall, at the new Computation Center. But there is a tiny model of the Univac 1105, a miniature computer, weighing about 100 pounds, and on display in the Morehead Building.

Remington Rand has manufactured a model of the big electronic brain, and the only one of its kind in the world is permanently installed at Chapel Hill. The little Univac looks just the same as the big one. In addition to the small-size replica of the Univac 1105, the display in Morehead building also has panels and lights and charts which can be illuminated by pushbuttons to explain the uses of the electronic computing system.
