

Chapel Hill: Place Of Many Moods

By RON SHUMATE

Chapel Hill is a place of many moods. One minute it will be bustling with activity, and the next it will be as quiet as the proverbial lamb.

Such was the case when final examinations were over. For days students had been moving frantically out of town just the minute their last exam was over. Then suddenly, last week, everyone was gone except for the graduating seniors and a few miscellaneous students.

But Saturday the parents and alumni began to pour into the town from every possible direction, in every possible kind, make and model of car. The Carolina Inn was besieged by hundreds of people. As one Inn employe put it, "The place is a madhouse."

After graduation was over, Chapel Hill got a day of rest on Monday. Tuesday a few summer students began to trickle in, and the flood gates burst Wednesday. Thursday was a day of confusion ("Where's South Building"), distress ("I, er, ah, lost my card to get my class tickets . . . ma'm"), and, at times, outright panic ("Ye gods, I left all my summer pants at home").

Many of the local eating establishments, closed during the break, again opened for business.

For those of you who have never been here before, you will find below a brief rundown of the University and the town. For those who have been here before, the remainder of this article may serve to remind you of a place you haven't been to in a while.

We'll take the campus first.

First on the list is Graham Memorial. Here you will find a spacious lounge, amply furnished with soft chairs and sofas, with music piped in from the information office across the hall. Right next to the lounge is a TV room, which is next to a small kitchen which has a few refreshments.

Downstairs is the air-conditioned pool room, along with the endzevous Room, which has a juke box and plenty of room for dancing. In the hallway are drink and candy machines. A barber shop is in the back.

On the second floor are the student government offices, along with "The News" office.

You'll find free flicks in the auditorium at Carroll Hall on Friday and Saturday nights. These flicks range—or at least have in the past—from old Lon Chaney silents to more recent films such as "Picnic," "Bus Stop" and "The Benny Goodman Story."

The Pine Room in the basement of Lenoir Hall is a favorite hang-out for the coffee drinkers and the bridge players. A juke box is also found there.

And of course there is the library. We just thought we'd tell you about it, so you'll at least know there is one. It's that big building sitting there across the street from the Bell Tower. It has books in it, along with maps, magazines, newspapers and many other interesting little things. And the stacks are air-conditioned.

For a between-classes break there's Y-Court. Here you're likely to meet that good-looking blonde who sits next to you in Basket-Weaving 43. And if you're not careful you'll lose that donut to one of the ever-present dogs who lurk in the shadows to snatch little goodies away from unsuspecting students.

If you happen to be up around the corner of Cameron Ave. and Columbia St., between classes you can get that donut at the Scuttlebutt. The dogs are here, too, along with bees that infest wastebaskets outside.

The town is equally varied in its assortment of places to go and things to do. Beginning on East Franklin St., there's Kemp's Record shop, where you can go and browse, or buy, or browse and buy. Next door is the Dairy Bar.

Right next to the Post Office is Harry's, where you can find the local crop of "beats," along with contemporary paintings, beer and a menu that ranges from peanut butter sandwiches to steaks.

On the same side of the street you will find the Rathskeller. But you have to look closely at first, because you have to go down some stairs to get to it. The entranceway is right between Sutton's Drug Store and Ledbetter-Pickard Stationery Store. In the at you'll be able to get many different foods, and many kinds of beer.

If you're a cafeteria fan, you may find the N. C. Cafeteria or the Village Cafeteria to your liking. Next door to the Village is the Goody Shop.

If you want to drink beer with no fear of succumbing to hunger pangs, the Tempo Room is the place for you. For the only thing other than beer that you can get at the Tempo is pretzels, pickles and pickled.

Fowler's and the A&P, down on West Franklin will be able to provide you with all the groceries you'll need—including chocolate-covered ants, if you have an ant-eater with a sweet tooth.

Summer Enrollment May Top 6,200

Commencement Speeches Stress University Freedom

Chancellor William B. Aycock, addressing alumni last Monday, and President William C. Friday, speaking to graduating seniors at Commencement exercises in the University of North Carolina, took stands for freedom and expressed determination to resist restraints "by interference or undue pressure from without or within."

Chancellor Aycock said it is imperative that the University "be free to listen to differing views on controversial issues of the day."

President Friday said, "This University has withstood pressures before; I do not fear the future, for the University will withstand pressures again."

Chancellor Aycock spoke at the annual Alumni Luncheon in Lenoir Hall. President Friday spoke in Kenan Stadium, addressing his remarks chiefly to graduating seniors and parents.

Quotations from Chancellor Aycock's speech follow:

"An institution engaged in higher education cannot be a university if it undertakes to fix or freeze knowledge or doctrine merely because it is suitable to (Continued on Page 7)

Total enrollment for UNC's Summer Session is expected to top the 6,200 mark for both terms.

Over 3,600 students are expected to enroll for the first term and over 2,600 are expected for the second term.

"Inquiries, room reservations and acceptances indicate some increase over last summer's enrollment," Dr. A. K. King, Summer School director, said Tuesday.

The University will continue operating on a full-scale basis so that students can take advantage of all its facilities.

Courses will be offered in 31 fields for undergraduate, graduate and professional students who will be able to take required and elective courses in regular degree programs. UNC is also the place for teachers seeking renewal of certificates.

Over 20 per cent of the enrollment will be teachers, most of whom will be enrolled for a degree program in the Graduate School.

A special program for music teachers and a program in special education for teachers of slow learners have been added to this summer's courses.

Six to seven hundred visiting students from other schools are expected to enroll. Last summer over 80 different institutions were represented here.

The summer faculty will consist of 215 regular staff members who will be supplemented by more than 50 part-time instructors and lab assistants and 22 visiting instructors.

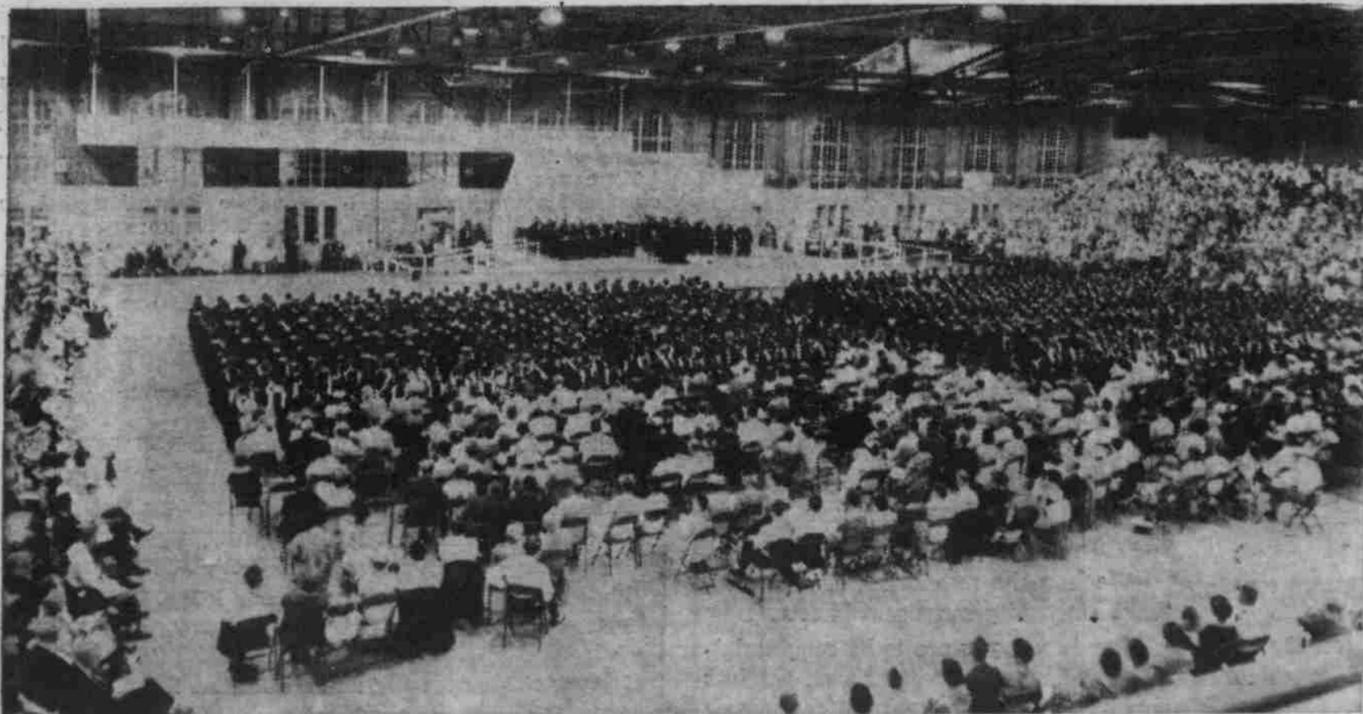

"The range of courses offered at all levels during the summer is one of the largest offered by any institution in the Southeast," Dr. King said.

"This summer will also be remembered as the first one in which we extended the comforts and efficiency of air-conditioning to the general student body," he said.

Lenoir Dining Hall and a general study room in the library have been air-conditioned. Peabody Hall will be air-conditioned shortly after the opening of the first term of the summer.

"We believe air-conditioning will pay big dividends in causing students to accelerate their studies which will result in the fuller utilization of our facilities on a year-round basis," Dr. King said.

The offices of the Summer Session have been moved to 101 Peabody Hall which is located in the new addition of that building.

FULL HOUSE—A late afternoon rain drove graduating seniors, their parents and friends indoors for Commencement exercises Monday night. But Woolen Gym was packed nearly to the proverbial rafters, as Governor Hodges gave the featured address.

Chancellor Aycock and President Friday also gave addresses to the seniors. But, of course, the highlight of the evening was the conferring of degrees.
