

UNC Bacteriologist Headed For Baylor

Dr. Kendall Owen Smith who "has made significant contributions to the knowledge of how viruses invade living tissue cells" in research utilizing a powerful electron microscope at the UNC School of Medicine, has accepted a position at Baylor University in Houston, Texas.

Dr. Smith, a Ph.D. graduate in bacteriology in the UNC medical schools and a native of Wilson, N. C. has been since August 1959 a postdoctorate trainee of the U. S. Public Health Service, working with Dr. Gordon Sharp in the newly-established biophysics laboratory in the School of Medicine here. Dr. Smith has worked with Dr. Sharp in experiments using the electron microscope, the laboratory device that "can see and count the minute killers (viruses) and trace their course of invasion."

University of North Carolina is one of the few institutions in the nation having the electron microscope.

At Baylor University, Dr. Smith will work with Dr. Joseph Melnik, and continuation of experiments begun at Chapel Hill will be possible.

Dr. Smith is the son of Mr. and Mrs. W. Ray Smith of Washington, D. C. He is married to the former Miss Irene Outlaw, daughter of W. L. Outlaw of San Antonio, Texas. The Smiths have one child, David.

Dr. Smith received the B.A. degree in biology at George Washington University in 1951. He was chief laboratory technician at a U. S. Army Field Hospital in Japan during the Korean War. He came to Chapel Hill in 1954 as a teaching assistant in the medical school department of bacteriology and received his doctorate in 1959.

Finance Institute Theme

"Finance" is the main theme at the 15th annual institute of one of the nation's unique training programs serving merchants and other businessmen to be held here through Saturday, sponsored by the Associated Credit Bureau of America and the UNC Bureau of Business Services and Research.

Credit bureau managers from nine southern states and from New York, Ohio and Illinois will attend. Margaret J. Huggins of Hickory is president of the institute.

J. Ernest Yarbrough of Winston-Salem is business manager and registrar for the meet titled the "Southeastern Management Institute for Credit Bureau and Collection Service Executives." Prof. Rex S. Winslow of Chapel Hill is director of local arrangements. Enrollment will exceed 125.

Richard M. Holmes of Atlanta, Ga. is one of the main members of the visiting faculty. An authority on "getting the job done through people," incentive plans, production controls and financial records and planning, he is general manager of The Affiliated Companies in Atlanta. His topic: "Basic Skills, Tools and Techniques of Management."

Other visiting faculty members will be Eugene B. Greer, Atlanta, a credit bureau administrator; Sumpter Priddy, Richmond, director of the Virginia Retail Merchants Assn.; Prof. Donald K. Springen, of the UNC English Dept.; Elmer Uffman, Baton Rouge, La., a collection service manager; Carl Roewe of St. Louis, Mo.; Clyde A. Brooks, Greensboro; vice-president of Ryder Tank Line, Inc.; William M. Butler, vice president of Springfield Woolen Mills; James R. Fowler, Tarboro, secretary of Carolina Telephone Co.; Tillman B. Thomas, secretary of Heritage Furniture Co., High Point.

Safety Campaigns Are Emphasized

Safety campaigns of all kinds were emphasized by James R. Matthews of New York, director of public relations for the National Association of Insurance Agents, speaking at a human relations seminar of the Institute of Insurance held here.

Baby-sitter training campaigns, safety poster contests for school children, school safety patrols, and safe-driving "S-Days" were among those mentioned.

Over 100 deaths per month occur in the United States because parents leave their children unattended or in the care of an incompetent baby-sitter, Matthews said. One-third of child deaths by fire are caused by parental neglect, he added.

"A baby-sitter training program is the most important weapon you have in your hands to combat this dangerous situation," the North Carolina insurance agents were told. Several community groups can assist insurance men in a campaign to train baby-sitters, particularly in fire prevention. Matthews cited a pamphlet which is available, "Fire Safety Suggestions for Parents and Baby-Sitters," sponsored by the National Board of Fire Underwriters.

Matthews mentioned active programs with the cooperation of fire chiefs in training baby-sitters, including special lectures and classes for older children and adults who are baby-sitters, with examinations and certificates showing that one has passed the course.

Matthews stressed the importance of good organization and cooperation of local authorities in all such safety campaigns.

TRAFFIC

Albert M. Thomasson of the Atlanta Insurance Information Institute reported the success of a state-wide program of "citizen support groups for stronger traffic legislation" recently held in Florida.
