IN MICHIGAN WITH KENNEDY—Sen. John K. Kennedy whistling through job-hungry Michigan Friday, stressed the need for "full employment" in America and told this GOP territory America's struggle "is not a debate."

Kennedy's special campaign train meandered in a big 250-mile circle around South Central Michigan where the Democratic presidential nominee over and over again pounded his theme that a Democratic administration would make the country "move ahead."

He said the record of the Eisenhower administration was just the opposite.

Kennedy had good crowds this autumn day and sunshine which did not disappear until mid-afternoon at Grand Rapids where he spoke to an estimated 15,000 persons who crowded the city's downtown square.

A minor campaign flop developed early in the day when the public address system on the senator's train carried what sounded to some newsmen like a sotto voice "what the hell" remark by someone on the train's rear platform during a pause midway in the senator's speech at Ann Arbor.

LOS ANGELES — Vice President Richard M. Nixon Friday night climaxed three days of intensive campaigning in Southern California with a stout defense of Eisenhower administration Far East policies.

He included a prognosis that the Quemoy-Matsu attitude of Sen. John F. Kennedy would lead to war if put into operation.

Nixon spent the day touring the Los Angeles area by automobile and before flying to Phoenix, Ariz., late Friday night, delivered what he regarded as one of his major foreign policy pronouncements of the campaign to the world newspaper forum. This was a mammoth editorial forum sponsored by the California Newspaper Publishers Association.

As he bounced around the highways and boulevards of Los Angeles in the back seat of an open white convertible during the day, Nixon made last-minute changes in the text of his address, possibly taking into consideration his sharp exchange on television Thursday night with his Democratic opponent.

The vice president's motorcade started out from City Hall late Friday morning. The car carrying Nixon and with ticker tape.

Students Table Rule To Standardize Courts

A resolution to standardize procedures in Student courts was tabled over some opposition in the Student Legislature Thursday night.

A bill to appropriate $300 for the upcoming UNC-Toronto exchange was sent back to the Finance Committee. The exchange committee had failed to submit their expense schedule on time. The exchange, under which 22 University of Toronto students will visit Chapel Hill during the weekend of November 11, is a cultural exchange started for the first time last year. Twenty-two UNC students will visit the University of Toronto later on in the year.

The bill to expand the activities of the Bad Check committee of the Student Government into a Student Credit Commission was tabled.

In a slow, short session, three bills were passed. One appropriated an additional $42 to the Indonesian student studying here under the Foreign Students' Leadership Program.

Another bill passed Thursday night placed the editor of the Carolina Handbook on the Orientation Committee to insure closer liaison between these two groups. The third bill

Tar Heel Gridgers Seek Second Victory Of Season Today Against Winless Deacs

Old Books Live, Says Professor

"A row of dusty, old books can come to life," said Professor Helmut Lehmann-Haupt, an authority on rare books, who spoke on "University Day," the 167th birthday of the University of North Carolina.

Professor Lehmann-Haupt spoke on "New Lights from Old Books, Man's Place in Society: Through the Looking Glass of Book Illustration."

"On this special occasion of the one millionth book, a great event in the University Library's history, it is necessary to show how old books can come to life," said the Professor.

His speech was illustrated with 40 slides showing pages from books of the 16th century to the present representing art as a reflection of humanity. Professor Lehmann-Haupt said that, "through four centuries, great artists have been attracted to the social theme—man's place in society—to show man's relation to society."

Giving four main themes which represent the image of man, Professor Lehmann-Haupt showed how humanism was the leading movement for not only the authors of the books, but the artists' representations of man. "Humanism is the great interest in man as the center of the universe," said the Professor.

Professor Lehmann-Haupt has also studied the art of dictatorships in the 20th century. "Dictators claim that they have the only art which is representative of a social art, but this is only propaganda," he continued. "The social theme in art is as old as printing," he said.

Professor Helmut Lehmann-Haupt has taught in European universities and at Columbia University. He is a rare book lecturer and dealer, and is actively engaged with H. P. Kraus in New York, one of the foremost rare book dealers in the United States.

TO COLUMBIA:

Caravan Set Next Week

Ticket sales will close Tuesday for the UNC-South Carolina game, scheduled for next Saturday afternoon in Columbia, S. C. A large block of student tickets has been reserved for Tar Heel followers as part of the annual Carolina Caravan Weekend Observance.

Student Athletic Council President Angus Duff announced yesterday that the South Carolina game had been selected for this year's pilgrimage because it was being played in conjunction with the S. C. State Fair. "This fair is supposed to be one of the best in the area, and we hope a large number of people will want to go down for both attractions," Duff said.

In past years Student Government has sponsored the Caravan project, but the Athletic Council has been given the responsibility for the event this year. Students are being encouraged to arrange car pools and drive down to Columbia (about 200 miles), either Friday afternoon or Saturday morning.

The group has earned critical acclaim throughout the world and has become universally recognized as being "everything such a group should be including impeccable intonation and beautiful tone."

Headed by cellist Antonio Janigro, the "Solisti di Zagreb" is returning to the United States after a three-year absence during which they appeared in all the major cities and festivals in Europe.

The group is composed of 13 members, all internationally acclaimed artists in their own rights. The 7 violinists, 2 violists, 3 cellists and one double-bass player have been performing together since 1954 and have been credited with "weaving a soft web of beauty with their freshness and smoothness of tone."

Series officials will not announce the group's program until next week, but selections by Mozart and Vivaldi are expected to be included.

Plans are underway for a Tar Heel pep rally Friday night on the South Carolina campus if enough people arrive in time. The UNC Band is also making plans to attend the game.

Although no free cuts will be granted for the weekend, officials are hopeful that a large delegation will attend the game. Student Government President David Grigg has given his support to the Caravan Weekend, by asking "for student body cooperation with the Athletic Council. I hope as many students as possible will go to Columbia and support the team," Grigg said.

Duff reminded students that tickets for the game will only be available through Tuesday at the Woolen Gym ticket office. "They go back to South Carolina after Tuesday's sales," he said.

Yugoslavs To Perform Friday

"I Solisti Di Zagreb," the world-famous Yugoslavian chamber music orchestra, will appear at 8 p.m. Friday in Memorial Hall.

The performance will be the opening attraction of the Chapel Hill Concert Series, and students will be admitted free to the balcony. As in past years, Graham Memorial Activities Board has reserved the entire balcony for Carolina students.

Four other concerts will be presented during the current season. Adele Addison, noted soprano, will be featured on Thursday, December 1. Miss Addison has appeared with the major American orchestras, including the New York Philharmonic, and recorded the soundtrack of "Porgy and Bess."

The Jose Limon Dance Company will appear on Thursday, February 9. "A closely knit, superbly integrated unit," the Limon troupe will be on their tenth anniversary tour.

The highly acclaimed young pianist, Byron Janis, will make his Chapel Hill appearance on Wednesday, March 21. Janis, who is just entering his thirties, was selected to open American Festival Week at the Brussels World Fair, receiving a "lengthy and tumultuous reception."

Maria Schell Picture To Be Shown Sunday

"Gervaise," the remarkable film dramatization of Emile Zola's masterpiece of realistic writing, will be the second of this semester's Sunday Cinema presentations.

To be shown Sunday evening in Carroll Hall at 7:30 and 9:30 p.m., this powerful German film stars Maria Schell. Winner of ten world-wide screen awards, "Gervaise" is a touching story of a woman's ruin and has been described as a vast tragedy of rage at man's fate.

Miss Schell, internationally known as one of Germany's great actresses, gives a marvelously real and vital portrayal as the doomed heroine.

Tonight's Free Flick is "The Bad and the Beautiful," the compelling story of the conflict between an aspiring actress and a ruthless producer. It stars Lana Turner, Kirk Douglas and Gloria Grahame in the role which won her the Academy Award for Best Supporting Actress.

Two of the shots were for touchdowns. This gives Snead an average of about 50 percent of his passes completed. Three of his passes were intercepted by opposing teams.

Carolina ably demonstrated her ability at pass defense in the Notre Dame contest as the Tar Heels intercepted five Irish aeriels. Carolina fans hope that this performance will be duplicated in stopping the expected Deacon passing onslaught today.

Wake Forest was picked by several sportswriters as their choice to cop the Atlantic Coast Conference crown. Their initial three games have not borne this out so far. They dropped their opener to mighty Clemson, 28-7, then were beaten by Florida State, 14-6 and last week by always tough Virginia Tech, 22-13.

This day has been designated Law Day and also Band Day. A total of 52 bands from North Carolina high schools have been invited to participate. They embrace some 3,514 musicians. The lawyers earlier this week presented Coach Hickey with an injunction to win this game.

UNC Holds Victory Edge Over Deacons

Spurred by their great victory over Notre Dame last week North Carolina's Tar Heels seek their second triumph of the season today against the Deacons from Wake Forest.

Game time is 2 o'clock in Kenan Stadium. This rivalry, which began in 1888, has always been very exciting. Carolina holds the edge in victories, winning 38 and losing 16. Last year the Tar Heels stopped the Deacs on a muddy field in Winston-Salem, 21-18.

Reports out of Winston say that the Demon Deacons are up for this game. Wake Coach Billy Hillenbrand said that this feeling stems from a statement made by some Tar Heel after last year's game to the effect that the Heels had pushed the ball down Wake's throat.

Carolina, on the other hand, is not regarding this encounter lightly. They have much more confidence than they did two weeks ago, thanks to the fine victory over the Irish. But, Coach Jim Hickey has warned his squad that with ace slinger Norman Snead the Deacs are always dangerous.

Snead's accurate passing arm has been put to good use by the Demon Deacons. In 44 attempts in his first two games, the Wake Forest gunner has completed 23 passes for a total of 209 yards gained in the air.

On The Campus

The fall meeting of the local chapter of the American Association of University Professors will be held at 8 p.m. Tuesday in the Morehead Planetarium Faculty Lounge. President Friday will speak on "Some Comments on the University."

In connection with the Law Day Observance today, an exhibit on "American Law Student Publications" is on view in Manning Hall. The Journalism School is exhibiting political cartoons by William Sanders in Howell Hall, preparatory to Friday's dedication ceremonies.

Campaigners Are Invading Area Soil

Battling Bob Gavin, an uphill fighter for the State's highest office, brought his entourage to Chapel Hill yesterday morning for a brief midtown appearance in front of the University Methodist Church.

"I would swap anything to be back in Chapel Hill," the Republican standard bearer told an appreciative audience of students and townspeople.

Gavin, as well as his opponent Terry Sanford, is a graduate of Carolina. The two of them were classmates in Law School.

Gavin continued to hammer away at his conservative theme saying, "We can be progressive and at the same time be conservative in North Carolina."

In a plea for a two-party system, the candidate remarked, "When we have a two-party system of government in North Carolina, we will have a government responsible and responsible to all the people."

"I am pledged to try and bring about a civil service system for this state of ours," Gavin said in another section of his brief speech.

Appearing with Gavin were a number of political hopefuls seeking a variety of offices. Most significant was the GOP candidate for the U. S. Senate seat—Kyle Hayes of North Wilkesboro. Hayes was a candidate for Lieut. Gov. in 1948 and for Governor in 1956. He spoke for a few moments from the back of the truck parked on Franklin St. All candidates used this method, hoping the volume of the public address system would attract interest.

S. C. Eggers of Boone, the Republican candidate for Lieut. Gov. was also in attendance. After his remarks had concluded, Eggers made reference to the fact he had served in the General Assembly with his opponent, H. Cloyd Philpott of Lexington. Eggers was a member of that body in 1945-47-49 and 1957.

Upon questioning, Eggers showed great confidence in Republican chances on the state level next month. He pointed to crowds of 1,000 in Kinston and 600 in Jacksonville as evidence of interest in the candidacy of Gavin.

Remarking on the supporters of former candidate I. Beverly Lake, he said, "they're gonna support Gavin."

Gavin refused to make a prediction concerning the margin of victory he expected Richard M. Nixon to receive in the state except to say he "thought he would win."

Gavin himself, using a North Carolina political phrase, said he, "expects to come into Raleigh ahead, and win or lose it in the east."

Gavin Visits Chapel Hill

North Carolina political phrase, said he, "expects to come into Raleigh ahead, and win or lose it in the east."

By this, he meant he anticipated a lead in voting west of Raleigh, and would either win the governorship or lose it depending on the margin in the eastern part of the state.

Gavin will return to Chapel Hill on Oct. 16 for a major address in Hill Hall.

By DAVIS B. YOUNG

RALEIGH, Oct. 13—The grand old man of the Democratic Party flew into the Capital City Thursday and delighted a highly partisan crowd of North Carolina political bigwigs with his outspoken barbs directed toward Republican presidential candidate Richard M. Nixon.

Former President Harry S. Truman—the man from Independence, Mo.—did not let up once in assailing the record, program and position of the GOP standard bearer.

Truman Hits Nixon

At one point, in reference to Nixon, the colorful Truman said, "I am not in a position to express my opinion here in language that is polite."

This followed a statement by an attractive Democratic supporter present—Faye Emerson—who had said, "These debates make me so angry I could spit nails."

More than 600 stalwarts turned out for the $50 per plate dinner extravaganza in the Sir Walter Hotel. Democratic gubernatorial candidate Terry Sanford served as master of ceremonies for the occasion.

Wears Button

Truman was introduced by Gov. Luther H. Hodges, who was sporting a button as big as a saucer which read, "Mamie start packing, the Kennedys are coming."

In his introduction of the ex-president, Hodges said, "Truman is not afraid of the devil or the Republicans, and you can take your choice."

Preceding the main address by Truman, the guests watched the third of the "Great Debates." There were numerous television sets in the dining room.

Much interest was aroused over the reaction of President Truman to the comment of Senator Kennedy and Nixon.

HST Amused

Truman was obviously amused when Nixon questioned the dignity with which the former president carried out his office. He appeared well satisfied with the rebuttals of Kennedy to each question.

When his turn to speak came, Truman praised Kennedy for his "courage," and made a strong appeal for a united ticket as the surest avenue to victory Nov. 8.

Truman referred to Nixon as "not fit to be president, my friends."

Earlier in the day, Truman met members of the North Carolina press in a brief question and answer session. His answers were the clear, concise and witty ones reporters (Continued on page 3)
