Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland where the national aspirations of more than 12 million Africans are running head-on into the determination of less than half a million white settlers determined to keep the gains of generations.

This week, after more than two months of bickering over proposed constitutional reforms, the Africans charged that Britain had "sold us down the river to the fierce and reactionary white minorities of Central Africa."

The Central African Federation is a governmental hodgepodge put together by Britain in 1953, with an area equal to California, Texas and New York combined.

Self-Governing

Southern Rhodesia, with a population of 233,000 Europeans, is a self-governing British colony with its own prime minister.

Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland are British protectorates with a European or white population of about 230,000.

Prime minister of the federation is tough, 54-year-old Sir

Roy Welensky, a Rhodesian of Russian Jewish parentage who married a South African, Dutch Protestant girl.

Subject To Veto

In theory, legislation which discriminates against Africans is subject to veto by the British secretary of state for commonwealth relations. In practice, the veto never has been exercised.

Southern Rhodesia's segregation policies are the chief reason for the bitter opposition to federation in both Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland, and the reason why this week the African leaders charged they had been "sold down the river."

The man in the middle is Welensky.

District Man

Many of Africa's non-whites distrust him, yet he himself has declared that a man should be judged by his achievements and not by the color of his skin.

At the moment, he does not feel that an African-governed federation would be good for the community. He says:

He Doesn't Sing Folk Songs

Mike Sings In Folk Tradition

Folksinger Mike Hall does not sing folk songs. He sings in the "folk tradition."

There is quite a difference according to Hall, who sings nightly at the Ranch House.

"Folk songs are the songs of a particular area or country. The folk tradition includes all folk songs of all countries. An old favorite may be a folk song in Mexico, but it's not a folk song in the United States," Hall says.

Professional For 5 Years

He has been a professional folksinger for five years, ever since he left his home in California at age 16.

He has sung all over the United States in concerts, nightclubs, coffee houses, high schools and private parties.

Mexico and Europe also have heard Hall, who is considered by some to be "better than Pete Seeger" (folksinger who appeared on campus in 1959).

With a group or as a one-man show, Hall plays his guitar and sings. He can play other string instruments, but the guitar is his favorite.

Offered Job

Although he was offered a job years ago to do a rock 'n' roll record, Hall passed it up because he had rather work at being a better folksinger. He doesn't have an agent, so he books his own shows.

"I don't particularly like playing in nightclubs because people aren't paying attention. I like for my audience to appreciate the songs.

"I prefer the concert-type show, but I have songs for all occasions. For a concert I figure the audience wants to be there, and it has paid money to hear good music, and that's what I try to give them," Hall says.

For most performances he wears a suit, but for some shows he dresses informally; however, he does not use "crazy hats" to dramatize the music.

Hall Keeps

Hall keeps his shows to singing and giving a little historical background to the songs. He doesn't tell jokes or try to be a comic.

Background to the songs is important according to Hall.

"Some love songs would be schmaltzy if they were translated into English from, say, Spanish or Israeli," he says. Hall has a repertoire of about 400 songs including songs in English, Spanish, French, Israeli and German.

Favorite Song

"I guess my favorite is one that I've sung only five or six times in Chapel Hill. It's about

Grad Wins Grant To Study Abroad

Jerry Hillard, graduate student at UNC, has received a Rotary Foundation Fellowship for study abroad during the 1961-62 academic year.

The award was announced by the Rotary International, a world-wide service club organization.

As one of 133 students from 33 countries to receive this honor, Hillard will study business administration and economics at one of the major European universities.

The Rotary Club of Salisbury, Hillard's hometown, recommended him for the fellowship.

GETTING DOWN TO CASES... WITH AN ELECTRONIC COMPUTER

A young lawyer may spend many years searching through the countless volumes in a law library before he ever gets a chance to plead a case. His job is to research the cases which may provide legal precedent. It's a very necessary but tedious task.

Recently it was demonstrated that an IBM computer could accomplish electronic retrieval of statutory law. Nearly 2,000 statutes pertaining to a specific area of the law were stored in the computer's memory. In response to inquiries, the computer searched its memory at electronic speed and on instructions pointed out either citations or the full text of relevant statutes. This was accomplished in minutes. It might have taken a young lawyer the entire day.

Putting computers to work in unusual ways is not new at IBM. Computers are now doing remarkable jobs in interesting and important areas of business, industry, science and government.

If you are interested in a company that offers you an exciting career with virtually unlimited growth potential, then you should investigate IBM. Positions are open in research, development, programming and manufacturing. The IBM representative will be glad to discuss any one of these fields with you. Your placement office can give you further information and arrange for an appointment. Or you may write, outlining your background and interests, to: Manager of Technical Employment, IBM Corporation, 590 Madison Avenue, New York 22, N.Y.

You naturally have a better chance to grow with a growth company. IBM
