Court Suspends Student Of Law Until December

A first-year law student was convicted of being partially unclothed before a Durham theater audience by the Law School Court here Friday night.

The student, Ken Friedman of Allenhurst, N. J., was suspended from school until December 1, 1961, when he can apply for spring semester re-admittance.

Basis for the conviction was the eyewitness testimony of two Durham residents, who both identified Friedman as one of two boys who entered a door leading to the stage of the Carolina Theater in Durham on the night of March 28.

"Yoo Hoo" Several minutes later two boys came out on the stage while the movie "To Hell and Back" was still playing, turned their backs to the audience and lowered their pants, both shouting "Yoo hoo." Then the boys ran off the stage.

The wife of one of the men who identified Friedman said that she could not say that he was the boy who went on stage that night.

Friedman pled innocent to the charge. Three defense witnesses testified that Friedman was in his seat at the time of the incident.

Ballad Program On Lawn Today

Dan Brock and Sandra Norwell, a team of young balladeers, will appear tonight in this year's final "Petite Musicale."

To be held on the lawn in front of Graham Memorial, their program will consist of folk songs and ballads including several audience participation numbers.

Brock, a sophomore here from Lexington, Kentucky, plays trumpet with the UNC Symphony Orchestra. He began singing in the spring of his senior year at Lawrenceville School in New Jersey, and last year sang with Larry Vickers and at sorority houses and at the North Carolina Folk Festival.

While entertaining between acts at an outdoor theater this summer, Brock met Miss Norwell and the two began singing for fun. They received encouragement from John Jacob Niles, the "dean" of American folk-singers.

The team gave a successful concert with Niles last fall. They have performed at concerts and radio and TV work in Lexington with more planned for this summer.

From Danville, Kentucky, Miss Norwell plans to enter Newcomb College this fall.

In case of foul weather, tonight's concert will be held in the GM lounge.

What Is Future Of The Honor System?

COMMENTARY
BY LLOYD LITTLE

"The future of the honor council and the honor system may depend on what is said here tonight and repercussions from the Moe trial," said President Bill Harris at the student demonstration Thursday night.

Student interest generated by the suspension of Doug Moe from school has intensified to the point that several professors have reported entire class periods taken up with discussions of the honor system at Carolina. Some teachers have even been approached in hallways and on the campus for opinions on the system.

A number of questions on specific issues have been raised by students concerning the Moe case:

(1) What exactly did the honor council's verdict of not guilty mean?

(2) Why was not the second case of Moe's lying turned over to the honor council also?

(3) Why did the Chancellor take the action that he did?

(4) What is the future of the honor system at Carolina? George Campbell, chairman of the men's honor council, explained their verdict of not guilty, "We could not convict Moe for not turning Brown in unless we had already convicted Brown for the attempted bribery."

However, a number of students have voiced the opinion that the council should have not taken the case or should have ruled mistrial, not propped, or waited until Brown's case was settled. Chancellor William B. Aycock stated that he had no comment on criticism on the verdict.

Aycock has given two reasons why he ruled on Moe's lying personally instead of giving it to the council: (a) only he knew all of the facts and (b) that Moe might not have admitted that he lied to the council.

Some students stated they felt if Aycock had turned the case over to the council and the council had ruled not guilty the whole university as well as the Chancellor would have received unfavorable public reaction.

"There was no doubt in my mind that Moe was guilty of lying and I personally decided to rule on that case. I accept all responsibility for my action," said Aycock.

Other students have indicated that they felt both cases should have been turned over to the council, either separately or in one case. One senior said, "If you want to live by the rules, you got to play by the rules. The honor council should have complete and defined authority."

At any rate, there is unusual student interest in the case and in the controversy of evaluating the present honor system. The only question that remains and is being discussed from Lenoir Hall to Harry's is:

What is the future of the honor system at Carolina?

Further Isolation Of Cuba Expected

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Kennedy administration is expected to pursue in the future a new Cuba policy aimed at quarantining the Fidel Castro regime and strengthening Democratic government in the rest of Latin America, it was learned Saturday.

This line of reasoning is emerging among top officials reviewing the failure of the Cuban invasion attempt and its impact on U.S. prestige.

High administration sources told United Press International that President Kennedy was "more convinced than ever" that the most positive policy would be to redouble support for Latin America's battle against poverty and illiteracy which create conditions that allow Castroism or Communism to develop.

Booster Social Development

The President was reported to be bolstering his "Alliance for Progress" plan for social development with several large-scale bilateral arrangements to help Brazil, Venezuela and Bolivia to overcome pressing financial difficulties.
