

Bad Checks Passed

 person's account from a special fund.
 Under Federal law, however, the bank must pay or return a check within 24 hours. If the person is well known the bank often holds the check; however, in cases of students, who cannot easily be contacted, the bank usually returns the check to the merchant.

Both banks in Chapel Hill charge $1.50 to the person's account for each bad check. A number of merchants also charge up to $1.50 for bad checks.

FROM THE MERCHANTS

Mrs. Jean O'Daniel of the Chapel Hill Merchants Association, said her office has handled 20 bad checks since Nov. 6. In one case, a student had two worthless checks totalling $65. She added that she had heard of "many, many" checks that the merchants had cleared up themselves.

"The major cause is insufficient funds," she said. "Second is closing the account and third is the actual mistake in address, names and so forth."

"The merchants are complaining that there have been more and more bad checks lately."

"Merchants can take these cases to the Justice of the Peace the day they receive the check, but most of them first attempt to locate the student. However, the merchants have definitely been going to court over these cases more and more than in years past."

 "I think a lot of students don't feel responsible to the town and some simply can't keep their account straight. They are so used to being pampered by their parents' handling their accounts that they don't know what to do."
 "I don't think most of them do it on purpose."

FROM THE UNIVERSITY

Senior Eddie Manning, chairman of the Student Credit Commission (formerly the Bad Check Committee), has sent out about 10 notices to students every two weeks this semester.

"However, 'there seems to be fewer bad checks than in past years. So far this year I haven't had to send out a second notice. Either the merchants are handling them themselves or the students are paying them."

"After a second notice, which would probably carry a threat of court action, I would go to see the student personally. Usually there is just an error in keeping track of the account."

"In case a student refused to pay a bad check the Dean of Student Affairs would be notified, who has the power of holding back a diploma or grades."

"Most of these cases are just that the student didn't keep accurate records and they don't realize the consequences of passing a bad check."

What are the consequences? William Long, Assistant Dean of Student Affairs, said a student can be brought before the honor council if he passes a large enough check or repeatedly cashes bad checks.

"The last case was two and a half years ago when a student went before the council for a bad check and received indefinite probation. Of course, we have brought actual forgers before the council."

"I don't think there has been a large increase in bad check cases recently, at least judging from the cases coming through this office."

FROM THE COURTS:

B. J. Howard, clerk of Chapel Hill Recorder's Court, "We once had a great traffic in bad checks. Up until several years ago, the court generally issued a fine, plus the amount of the check. However, not long ago, Judge (William S.) Stewart decided the court was not going to be a bad check collector and he decided only to fine the person."

"In the past year, we've issued a few warrants, but usually when someone finds out that a warrant is out for his arrest, he comes in and pays the fine."

Perry at Central Carolina Bank viewed stricter legal enforcement "only if it becomes necessary. Nine times out of ten the student doesn't have that sort of money anyway."

Cherry at the Bank of Chapel Hill said, "We feel that we should do our own collecting. We prefer to work out these things through the university and with the students. I personally frown on the banks becoming mixed up in a legal tangle."

Most of the cases involving bad checks are handled through the Justice of the Peace, Paul Robertson. He issues the arrest warrant and it is served on the person by one of the three sheriff's deputies in this area.

Robertson said, "One of the main reasons I feel this has happened is that the courts handling these cases, including my own, have been too lenient. Usually the bad check case is settled with the verdict: prayer for judgment continued with the payment of the check and the cost of court which are eight dollars."

"This is being used too much. It is mainly due to, I feel public demands that are adhered to too often by the courts. In my opinion the 30-day sentence on the roads (which is the maximum sentence) should be used."

"The public too seldom wants this because they are interested only in getting the money. I also feel that the banks have encouraged this by advertising and urging people to pay their bills by check."

"There are so many young people who write checks promiscuously and then get the idea that they can do it and get by with it."

"Usually, I let the person off with paying the check and court costs. However, sometimes I have given 30-days of hard labor, just to teach him a lesson, and then suspend the sentence on payment of the check and costs."

"It is an evident fact that there are a lot of young people getting into college who did not get the proper training and discipline from their parents."

"The University doesn't have a class in such things as this. That has to be learned at home. It's more a matter of parental delinquency than juvenile delinquency in my opinion."

YRC Meeting To Feature B. Patterson

Bill Patterson, South Eastern Region College Chairman of the Young Republicans' clubs, will speak to the campus YRC concerning the state Young Republican convention.

The YRC meeting will be Monday, Jan. 15, at 7:30 p.m. in 210 Manning Hall. Club President Earl Baker said that the convention would be a "good opportunity for any Young Republican to learn more about politics, and have fun doing it." For that reason he urged all members to attend the Monday meeting, and "if possible to plan to be in the UNC delegation to the state convention."

Several resolutions have been proposed for consideration by the YRC. Among these are a resolution to improve representation of the student body in the National Student Association and a censure of the North Carolina General Assembly for "gerrymandering" Rep. Charles Jonas out of his district.

ments are functioning properly, thus knowing if the capsule is in the right place during orbit.

In the event the conventional devices fail, the stars will serve as a guide so that the astronaut will re-enter and land in the pre-designated area, ready to be picked up.

 As to why the National Aeronautical and Space Association (NASA) chose the Morehead Planetarium for this training, Miss Gail Johnson said "the prestige, background and convenience of the University and the enlarged and modernized Planetarium attracted NASA."

Manned Rocket To Be 27-Story Monster Ship

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The space agency said Tuesday that the rocket which will hurl the first Americans toward the moon will be a 27-story monster generating 7.5 millions pounds of thrust at liftoff.

Known for the time being as the advanced Saturn, it will have five times more booster power than the early Saturn with its 1.5 million pounds of thrust.

It also will be 20 times more powerful than the Atlas, the largest rocket now used for U. S. space flights, and seven to 10 times as powerful as Russia's current boosters.

In announcing details of the advanced Saturn, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration NASA in effect confirmed elimination of three intermediate versions of the Saturn bearing the drawing board designations of C-2, C-3, and C-4.

The early Saturn, the booster stage of which was successfully tested at Cape Canaveral, Fla., last fall, is C-1. The advanced Saturn is C-5.

The advanced Saturn's first flight test from the Cape is expected in 1965.
