

Peace Talks To Continue With Algeria

PARIS (UPI)—President Charles de Gaulle will begin the final and decisive phase of peace talks with the Algerian rebels "almost at once" despite right-wing extremist violence and Communist-backed strikes and riots, responsible government sources said Saturday.

The French Communist party, which spearheaded a bloody riot Thursday night to protest violence by the outlawed Secret Army Organization (OAS), defied De Gaulle further by calling for a series of strikes and demonstrations Monday to protest "police violence."

Fury Spurred
The left-wing group's fury was spurred by the alleged OAS kidnaping of 19-year-old Marc Andre Schwartz, son of a prominent left-wing leader and a cousin of Premier Michel Debre. Young Schwartz turned up safe and sound Saturday and said he was kidnaped at gunpoint.

The government was cracking down on both the right and the left. The Interior Ministry announced it would ban all demonstrations Monday and accused the Communists of throwing in 3,000 trained shock troops as a weapon of subversion.

In Algiers, 5,000 French troops, gendarmes and police swarmed through the European working district of Bab-el-Oued and arrested 21 suspects of the OAS and found 192 weapons. But elsewhere in Algeria OAS violence added to the death toll now approaching the 750 mark since Jan. 1.

The French army in Algeria has battled the rebel liberation movement for seven long and costly years. De Gaulle is determined to end the war and build up France's continental armed might.

Textiles Will Fight Competition

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The textile industry will resume next week its campaign to shrink the competitive advantage of foreign goods on U.S. store shelves.

The U.S. Tariff Commission is scheduled to begin Tuesday hearings on a proposal calling for an 8 1/2-cent-a-pound fee on the cotton content of textile imports.

The fee would be roughly equivalent to the difference in prices paid for domestic cotton and that of foreign mills.

The hearings have a strong political overtone.

The latest effort of the textile industry to curb imports comes against a backdrop of apparently successful negotiations for a long-term agreement on textiles and heatedly-denied reports that the hearings would be a sham.

The White House announced Friday a five-year agreement between 16 major cotton exporting and importing nations. It said the agreement would help safeguard the American cotton textile industry against injury from imports.

Romney GOP Candidate For Governor

DETROIT (UPI)—George Romney, president of American Motors Corp. and prominently mentioned as a 1964 presidential dark horse, Saturday announced he is a Republican candidate for governor of Michigan.

Romney, who has already forced the state Republican Party to accept his terms after saying the party has been controlled by "big business," said he will launch a "citizen campaign to get Michigan rolling."

Board to Meet
Romney, 54, said he will meet with the board of directors of American Motors Monday to ask for a leave of absence from his posts of AMC president and board chairman.

He resigned, immediately after his announcement of candidacy, from the "Citizens for Michigan," the "third political force" organization which he formed three years ago to try to resolve the deadlock between Michigan Republicans and Democrats over state money matters.

Until less than a year ago, Romney had not made public his political party affiliation.

Immediate Endorsement
Romney was given immediate endorsements as the Republican candidate for governor by national and state GOP leaders. He has been mentioned by former President Eisenhower, by 1960 nominee Richard M. Nixon and by Sen. Barry Goldwater, Republican con-

Powers Is Released

Last Wednesday

Abel had been released from Atlanta last Wednesday and taken to New York. He was flown to Europe only after U. S. authorities had assurances that Powers definitely would be set free.

The remarkable series of events that led to the trade began when Abel's wife sought clemency for his husband and wrote Kennedy before his inauguration. Negotiations are conducted in large part by Abel's U. S.-appointed attorney, James B. Donovan.

Informed sources said the President had never discussed the case with any Soviet official. And there were no plans for him to interview Powers as he did when the Russians soon after his inauguration.

Soviets made no mention of Abel, who was considered a top spy.

Powers' wife, Barbara, had been told previously that her husband was about to be released. Actual news that he was free, she said, was "the greatest happiness of my life."

Similarly, in their announcement on Powers' release, the Undersecretary of State George Ball was said to be eager to appear before the subcommittee to outline the State Department's speech review policies. The Department's role in censorship has been sharply attacked by Sen. Strom Thurmond, D-S.C., who claims department speech change reflected a "no-win" policy in the cold war.

Thurmond also wants the subcommittee to continue with the military phase of the speech censorship inquiry. Several witnesses are still to be heard, including Gen. George H. Decker, army chief of staff.

Controversial Questionnaire Is Discarded

WASHINGTON (UPI)—Senators conducting an inquiry into alleged military censorship discarded a controversial questionnaire on communism and may well abandon all such group testing, informed sources said Saturday.

They said the questionnaire, which created a furor after secretly being given to some marines and airmen here, was useless because of the publicity it received.

Opposed
The questionnaire technique is also opposed by some participants in the study, they said.

Members of the subcommittee are expected to meet next week to discuss the controversy created by the marine quiz and to decide where to go now. This is in light of President Kennedy's action invoking executive privilege and directing state and defense department reviewers not to answer on specific speech deletions.

Speech Review
Undersecretary of State George Ball was said to be eager to appear before the subcommittee to outline the State Department's speech review policies. The Department's role in censorship has been sharply attacked by Sen. Strom Thurmond, D-S.C., who claims department speech change reflected a "no-win" policy in the cold war.

Thurmond also wants the subcommittee to continue with the military phase of the speech censorship inquiry. Several witnesses are still to be heard, including Gen. George H. Decker, army chief of staff.
