

Editor, Literary Critic, Poet To Lead Symposium Panel

Lytle, Aldridge, Eaton Named

Andrew Nelson Lytle, editor of THE SEWANEE REVIEW, John W. Aldridge, noted literary critic, and Charles Edward Eaton, North Carolina poet, will lead a panel discussion for the Carolina Symposium on "Contemporary Revolutions in Literature" on Tuesday afternoon, April 3.

Lytle became the editor of America's oldest literary quarterly, THE SEWANEE REVIEW, in the fall of 1961, coming to this position with a long experience of fictional and critical writing. He has been connected with Sewanee and the University of the South for many years.

Born in Murfreesboro, Tennessee, in 1902, he received part of his education at Sewanee Military Academy. Lytle spent time at both Exeter College, Oxford, and the Sorbonne and was graduated from Vanderbilt in 1925, having been called home by the death of a grandfather. At this time he was interested more in acting than in writing and spent several years in New York on the stage.

When he returned to Vanderbilt, he came under the influence of the Agrarians at Vanderbilt and contributed to their symposium, I'LL TAKE MY STAND. Here he abandoned the theater for fiction. He has written four novels: "The Long Night," "At the Moon's Inn," "A Name for Evil," and "The Velvet Horn" and a biography, "Bedford Forrest and His Critter Company."

Lytle has taught history at Memphis Southwestern and the University of the South. From 1948 to 1961 he was Lecturer in Creative Writing at the University of Florida. He has been awarded both a Guggenheim fellowship in creative fiction and a Kenyon fellowship in fiction during his career.

Robert O. Bowen has said of Lytle's style that "Lytle's lyric prose resembles Faulkner's, though it is likely that the similarity indicates a common source rather than a borrowing. Where in Faulkner a character's rich emotive memories rush out with a hypnotic tremolo, in Lytle such passages fall toward either the haunting cadence of the folk ballad or the declamatory rhetoric of a Lear."

Writer For Harper's
Aldridge was born in Sioux City, Iowa, but grew up in rural Tennessee, near Chantanooga, where he later attended the University of Chattanooga. In 1942 he received a fellowship to the Bread Loaf School of English.

After serving with the army in Europe, he returned to the University of California at Berkeley, where he was graduated in 1947. Later in the same year he published a controversial article on the new generation of postwar writers in HARPER'S MAGAZINE.

From 1948 to 1955 he was at the University of Vermont as Assistant Professor of English and Director of the School of Modern Critical Studies, in which Allen Tate and other writers and critics participated. In 1953 he founded and edited the magazine DISCOVERY with the novelist Vance Bourjaily. In 1953 he was also a Lecturer and Fellow in the Christian Gauss Seminars in Criticism at Princeton University and finished there work on material for a book, "In Search of Heresy."

Son At UNC
Mr. Aldridge has lectured at universities throughout the country, including Queens College, Columbia, and Oberlin. In 1958 he was a Fulbright Professor of American Literature at the University of Munich. His latest position has been at Hollins College, where he has been writer-in-residence. He is now Professor of English at Hollins. During the next year he will go to Denmark on a Fulbright scholarship. Mr. Aldridge has been married, and has a son on the campus in this year's freshman class, Henry.

Aldridge has been a frequent contributor to prominent literary journals in this country. He has written, in addition to "In Search of Heresy," "Critiques and Essays on Modern Fiction," and "The Party at Cranton." He is currently working on a critical study of the American novel which he has tentatively titled "A Beast in View." His best known work, however, is probably his first, "After the Lost Generation," in which he analyzes the currents and philosophers behind the present group of postwar writers and their relationship to the postwar writers of the Twenties.

Eaton was born in Winston-Salem and educated at North Carolina, Princeton, and Harvard. He has taught English in Puerto Rico, at the University of Missouri, and here at Carolina where he has been in charge of courses in Creative Writing. In addition, he has served for more than four years as Vice Consul at the Embassy in Rio de Janeiro. He currently divides his time between Chapel Hill and Woodbury, Connecticut and devotes himself to writing.

Eaton's poems have appeared in many magazines, and he has published three books of poems: "The Bright Plain," "The Shadow of the Swimmer," and "The Greenhouse in the Garden." "The Shadow of the Swimmer" was recognized with the Ridgely Torrence Memorial Award. Eaton has also written a collection of Brazilian short stories, "Write me in Rio," which was published two years ago. More recently, a long poem, "Della Robbia in August," has been included in "American Literature: Readings and Critiques," recently released by G. P. Putnam. He is presently working on a book to be called "Allegiances."

John W. Aldridge

Both Poetry and Prose
Eaton does not limit himself to either poetry or prose because he believes that they complement each other. "Poetry trains you to the niceties of writing... and prose has more range to it." In a recent interview with a local newspaper, speaking of himself as a poet, he said "A lot of people ask me where I get my ideas for poems, and you can give technical answers—you get an idea from an image, perhaps, but where the ideas really come from is your experience, your own way of looking at things. All life is poetry."

Political Interest Decline Is Cited By Dr. Wallace

The steady decline in political interest in this country was stressed by Dr. Earl Wallace in his speech before the North Carolina State Student Legislature last night.

Dr. Wallace is a member of the UNC Faculty Council, a author of "Politics USA," and has written for the Law Review and the Journal of Politics.

He urged the legislators to take an active and informed part in politics and reminded them that they can be an influence on government.

Effect Of Apathy

"Those who do nothing more than vote participate in the political struggle because their apathy aids the group with the most power," he said. "I would remind you, however, that playing an active part in politics requires more than good will and an interest in community affairs. It demands a good deal of know how."

He said that challenges to government would be found in the fields of atomic energy, rockets and satellites, new methods of communications, newly asserted freedoms.

Domestic Problems

On the domestic scene he said that the growing labor force, automation, and unemployment would be our great problems.

These problems must be met by a more effective government, he said. And more and better politicians is the answer to more effective government. "Better government will come," he stated, "when people put more trust in their politicians and become more informed about government."

It's Spring Again

YESTERDAY'S SNOW might have looked pretty, but that's all. Before noon the falling sleet turned to rain, making things miserable. The weather bureau says today should be not quite as cold with partly clearing skies. —Photo by Jim Wallace

Peace Corps Regional Set

By STEVE LINDELL

Saint Patrick's Day will also be Peace Corps Day in Chapel Hill. On hand for the occasion will be a number of top-ranking national Peace Corps officials from Washington.

Chapel Hill has been designated the location of a regional Peace Corps Symposium which will last two days and cover all phases of the Peace Corps' operations and up-coming projects. Plans for the event have been worked out by the campus Peace Corps Committee, chaired by Jim Wagner.

Direct Contact

The state-wide symposium will enable students and faculty to gain valuable information about the Peace Corps by way of direct contact and discussion with the Corps directors from the nation's capitol.

Among the topics taken up in detail will be the selection and training of volunteers, areas of project development, volunteer recruitment and additional project information.

One highlight of the conference will be a noonday luncheon for delegates and interested students to be held in the Carolina Inn Ballroom. As in all meetings of the group, UNC students and faculty are especially invited to attend.

Yale Chaplain

The principal speaker at the luncheon will be the Reverend William Coffin, Chaplain of Yale University and a member of the National Advisory Board of the Peace Corps. Tickets for the luncheon are still available at $2 in the YMCA building, daily up to Thursday from 2-5 p.m.

The program of the Symposium will begin on Friday afternoon. Friday's feature will be an address by Mrs. Paul F. Geren, Deputy Director of the national Peace Corps, at 8:00 p.m. in Howell Hall. Following this a 52-minute film on the Peace Corps will be shown. After this a reception will be held in the Graham Memorial main lounge. The meeting will be open to the public.

Corps Forms Due Tuesday

North Carolinians wishing to take the official Peace Corps entrance test in Chapel Hill on Saturday, March 17, must have their applications in by noon, Tuesday, Miss Anne Queen, co-ordinator of the University's Peace Corps Committee announced yesterday.

The examination will be held at 2:30 p.m., March 17, in room 200, Gardner Hall.

Applications to take the test should be addressed to the Campus Peace Corps Committee, YWCA. All qualified U. S. citizens, eighteen years of age or over, who are interested in volunteering for the Peace Corps are eligible to take the test.

Questionnaire Forms

Application questionnaire forms for Peace Corps assignments will be available in Gardner Hall when the test is given on March 17. There are openings for qualified students and persons with academic, practical or technical experience in several fields to serve in countries where the Peace Corps is already in operation or will be in future months.

Especially needed are teachers; doctors, nurses, health specialists and educators; home economists; agricultural extension workers; land and road surveyors; architects; construction workers; librarians; statisticians; skilled craftsmen and technicians.

The Peace Corps test will be held during the first state college Peace Corps conference to be held here March 16-17. Most colleges in the state are expected to send delegates to the conference which will be attended by several top-ranking Peace Corps officials.

Then after the luncheon the second day of the Symposium will be concluded by a round of discussion groups on Peace Corps programs in Africa, Asia and Latin America. The regional study groups will be held in Howell Hall and will be attended by UNC professors.

Co-ordinated with the conference will be a special administration of the official Peace Corps entrance test. The examination will be held in rooms 200 and 208 Gardner Hall starting at 2:30 Saturday afternoon. The deadline for applicants who wish to take the March 17 test is Tuesday, March 13. All students wishing to take the test will please notify Anne Queen in the YMCA building before this Tuesday.

Chest Auction Falls Short Of Goal

Nets $300 Less Than Last Year

The Campus Chest, "UNC's only charity drive," fell short of its goal in the first of three fund raising efforts. Thursday night's auction netted only $600 as compared to last year's auction which netted $900.

The auction did have its lighter moments, however, as a wide variety of donated articles were sold by auctioneers Kemp B. Nye of Kemp's Records and Bob Cox of Town and Campus.

42 items provided by Kappa Kappa Gamma Sorority sold for $55. On the list was a six-pack of beer and a back rub by one of the sisters.

A blue silk pillow previously owned by Miss Suzy Johnson was sold for $7.50 after auctioneer Kemp expounded upon its "sentimental qualities."

Kappa Alpha fraternity paid $20 for five Tri Deltis who will work as "bar maids."

Kemp sold himself the entire ZBT pledge class for $12. The pledges will paint Kemp's store.

Disappointing Sale

In spite of these successful sales, Charlie Shelton, Campus Chest Chairman, said the group was

Chest Supports Tours Program

The Tours Exchange, a program similar to the Goettingen Exchange, will receive almost half its support from the Campus Chest solicitation drive now in progress.

The scholarship, inaugurated this year by the International Students Board, will provide money for a French student from the University of Poitiers to come here for a year of study, and Poitiers U. will provide a scholarship for a UNC student to go to France and study.

The scholarship for the French student provides for all expenses, including spending money, except for transportation which will be arranged by the University at Tours. All studies for the French student will be limited to the undergraduate level.

Freshman Camp Head Elected

Dick Manlove was elected president of the 1962 Freshman Camp this week and feels confident that "this year's program will be the best ever." Manlove served as athletic director at last year's camp.

John Barrow and Bruce Cooper were appointed as assistant directors by Manlove and he then announced that all persons interested in working on the program for next year should attend a meeting Tuesday night on the second floor of the YMCA at 7.

Mid-West Hit Surprise Storm Blankets South

Baxter To Deliver '62 Weil Lecture

Work Crew's Clean Up

By United Press International

A fast-traveling winter storm Friday surprised Virginia and North Georgia with school-closing snows, stacked four-foot drifts on the Great Smokies and threatened to dump a heavy snow blanket along a broad inland belt of the storm-scarred Atlantic Seaboard.

The storm hurled the Appalachians while it was still plastering parts of the Middle West with a mesy conglomeration that ranged from 9 inches of snow in Iowa and Nebraska to 2 to 6 inches of slush across the lower Great Lakes.

Along a thousand-mile stretch of the Atlantic Coast, work crews began cleaning up after a massive winter storm that lashed the seaboard for four days. The storm Thursday gave Florida's Gold Coast a parting backlash of 20-foot waves that took a multi-million-dollar damage toll.

Kennedy Takes Action

President Kennedy declared hard hit New Jersey a disaster area. Armed guards patrolled coastal communities to protect against looters in the aftermath of the worst storm in 25 years.

The storm that kicked up terrific tidal waves was far out in the Atlantic Friday. But it still sent flooding tides over some shorelines stretches and created emergencies at sea.

Four-foot drifts piled up in Smoky Mountains National Park near the Tennessee-North Carolina line. More than 200 vehicles, most of them trucks, bogged down in a massive traffic tieup near Crossville, Tenn.

Snow Smacks Virginia

More than five inches of snow hit Western Virginia, and the snow kept falling. Forecasters said the snow was expected to spread eastward to the coast and north-eastward toward New York and New England Friday night.

UP Endorses Candidates

The University Party endorsed 38 legislative candidates Thursday night and decided that the remaining 12 seats would be filled by the Executive committee on the basis of future interviews.

The party also delegated the selection of 3 NSA candidates to the committee. Bill Imes was nominated as the fourth candidate at the party convention last week.

The group approved the party's spring platform as read by Iman Allen after Bob Sevier questioned Allen on what specifically the party planned to do to procure an IDC Hut and to reserve Cobb basement for all-campus use.

Charlie Shaffer was nominated for president of the Carolina Athletic Association.
