to concentrate on the road.

Brown, dressed in a dark grey suit and red tie, further stated that Miss Evans finally became so amorously inclined that at a point, two miles outside of Chapel Hill, she sighed "Oh Larry," threw her arms around him, and kissed him firmly on the mouth. "This," added Brown, "impaired my vision."

Proceedings Slowed

The proceedings, time and again, were slowed down by remarks from the witness stand which sent the court into an uproar.

Perhaps the biggest outburst came when Miss Raiford, after refusing to answer Counsel's questions on her personal dating habits and morals, and stating that she and Mr. Flournoy had only been watching what went on in the front seat, was asked why she was watching the defendant and the plaintiff.

Miss Raiford, an attractive blond nursing student, fluttered her eyelashes, and innocently answered, "There wasn't anything else to do."

After deliberating for about ten minutes, the jury (eight men and four women) returned a 9-3 verdict of "Not Guilty" on the issue of Brown's negligence. Since the decision was not unanimous, Judge Gwynn asked the jury to retire again until an agreement of all the members had been made.

A half-hour later, the jury entered for a second time. Foreman Bert Hoffman slowly rose and repeated that the jury still was at a 9-3 separation, whereupon the distinguished judge ruled a "mistrial" after more than four hours of court haranguing.
