Sanford Advisor Knocks Political Disinterest Here

George Shearing, world-famous jazz pianist, will play with his quintet in Memorial Hall tonight at 8:00 p.m. The performance is sponsored by Graham Memorial.

Students will be admitted free with ID cards. Student wives' admission is $1.00. The general public will be admitted at 7:45 for $1.50 apiece if space is available.

Born in England, the blind pianist is a naturalized citizen of this country. His "Lullaby of Birdland" is among the most recorded jazz pieces all time. He is recognized as an arranger as well as composer and musician. Outstanding albums include "Velvet Carpet" and "Satin Affair."

Infirmary

Students in the Infirmary yesterday were Mary Allen, Richard Freeman, Morris Cramer, Abdo Bardawil, Spencer Womack, Anne Lupton, Robert Lowe, Gary Woods, Frank Anker, Howard Marsh, Harvey Whitley, Donald Carver, John Southard.

Joel Fleischman, legal adviser to Gov. Sanford and a UNC graduate, told the freshman roundtable discussion group Sunday night that he was greatly concerned at the lack of any political turmoil on campus over major national issues.

Fleischman was the third guest speaker in the series of discussions on state and national affairs that the freshman class has sponsored. The class officers hope to continue the discussion series next year as a regular weekly part of the University program.

In speaking on state affairs, Fleischman stated that a major reapportionment of voting districts in North Carolina was not likely in the near future. The voting balance in this state, he said, is not uneven enough to present a major problem.

Rather than reapportionment, Fleischman believes education to be the most pressing problem of state government in North Carolina today. Due to the state administrative setup, the governor can exert only indirect influence over education policies.

To correct this problem, Fleischman urged the adoption of a short ballot for the state in which the superintendent of education and other administrative officials would be appointed by the governor, instead of the present system in which these officials are elected by popular statewide election.

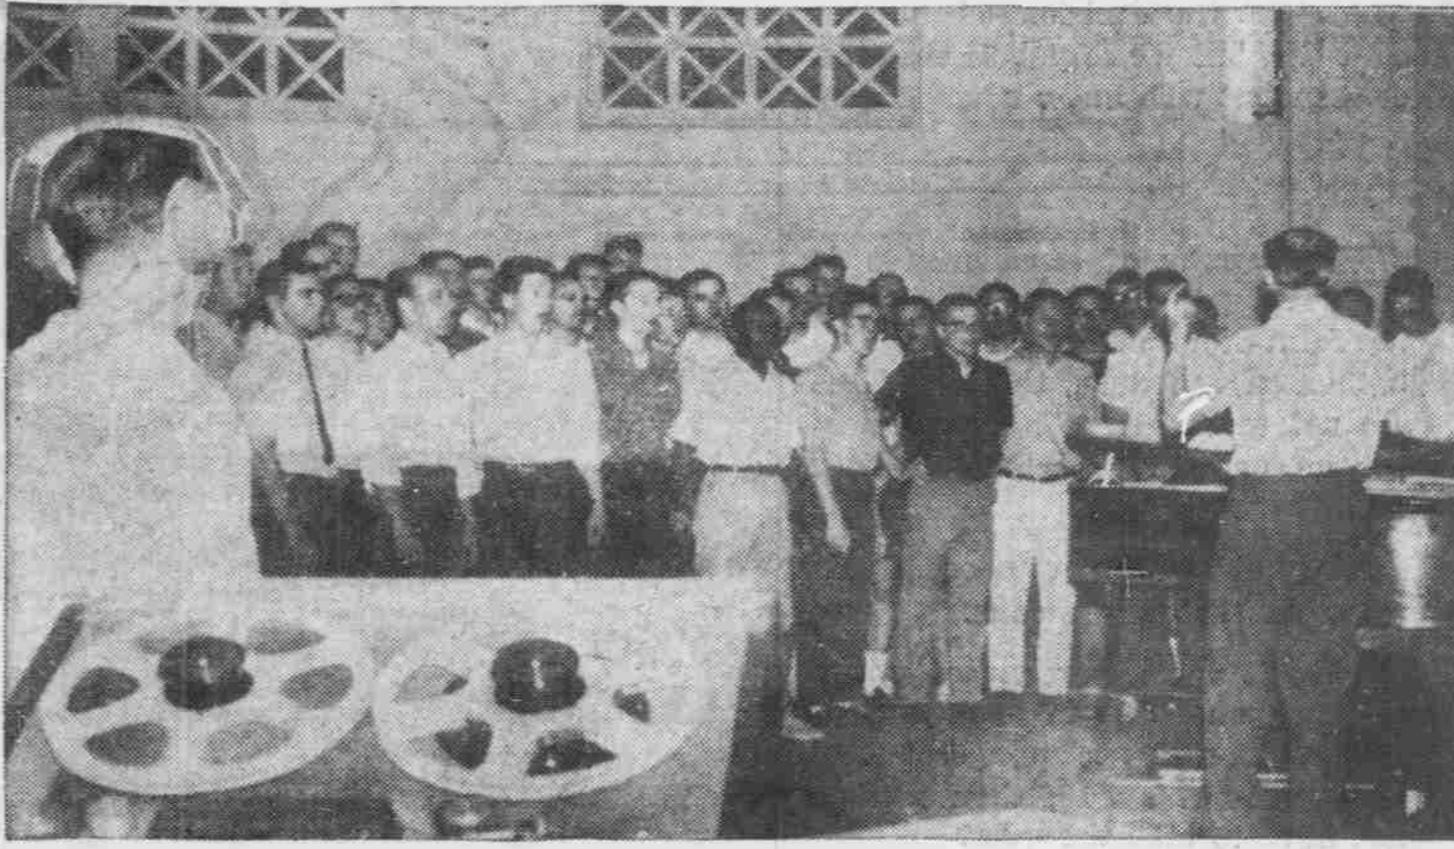

Fleischman graduated from UNC Law School and has done graduate work in law at Yale.

Allen's Manager Will Organize Party System

Chairman of the University Party Phil Smith announced his resignation yesterday and said that Don Curtis has been appointed Party Chairman until elections next fall.

"The need for someone who will continue party policy through the summer prompted the appointment," Smith said. "It is senseless for me to set up an organization I won't be working with."

Curtis was campaign manager for Inman Allen in recent elections and is dorm manager of Old West.

Smith said that the reason an election will not be held for the post is that it is so late in the semester. In addition, only one other person showed mild interest in the position.

Curtis said yesterday that he plans to set up committees for freshman orientation, draw up election strategy for fall elections, and plan election of party officers in the fall.

More Than 4,000 Will Pre-Register

By HUBERT HAWKINS

More than 4,000 students will pre-register for the fall semester. Assistant Director Frank Giles of the Central Office of Records said yesterday.

Preregistration continues in the College of Arts and Sciences and certain upper schools through Wednesday. Students will sign up for courses in the summer and fall sessions at this time.

"Preregistration will help insure getting the courses you want," Giles said. "It saves time for the student and it saves time for us. Most students learn the value of pre-registration by the time they are juniors or seniors."

Machines are being introduced in Central Records to increase the accuracy and speed of registration. "They are not infallible," he explained, "but they make many fewer mistakes than people."

Opening a door to a room full of grey machines in the basement of Hanes Hall, he described how the tickets are punched in code. The cards are sorted according to classes and kept during the term.

Registration will be on September 19-20 for those students who have not preregistered.

3 Soap Companies Operated By Students—With IBM Aid

$$$$$ But It's All On Paper

Seven Carolina students are gathered around, talking animatedly in what appears to be a routine bull session. But the subject is time is detergents—how to make them, how to sell them, how to make profit for the stockholders.

Down the hallway, in another classroom, are seven more students in the UNC School of Business Administration. They comprise another company in the detergent business, and they are in competition with the first company.

In another part of Carroll Hall, this one of eight members, also in the detergent business and competing against the other two companies for a share of the market and for profits in a free enterprise system.

They are running their own businesses in what is known as a management simulation in the U.N.C. School of Business. All 22 are undergraduate students in Business Administration and have been operating their simulated businesses since last September.

They hire laborers, build plants, purchase raw materials for soap, manufacture different kinds of detergents, advertise them, merchandise them, set up warehouses for storage, borrow money, invest in government bonds, pay out dividends to stockholders, and do most of the other things that managers must do daily in the detergent industry.

They make decisions, and they make mistakes. When right decisions are made, or wrong decisions are discovered, a company loses or gains ground in the hot competition, the students huddle together and decide what is best to do the next time, how to change their policies or strategies in order to sell an optimum amount of soap and make the most profits.

Progress Checks

They are able to check their progress weekly by means of printed outputs from the Remington Rand Univac 1105, the giant electronic computer at Chapel Hill. The Univac constructs the industrial environment and generates the reactions to the weekly decisions.

Actually one week in school time means one month in the detergent market in the course which is designated "B.A. 199, Management."

In Earnest

It's not just a contest of "wheeling and dealing" and making decisions with the toss of a coin.

The teams are in earnest. They stand to lose millions of dollars in a wrong decision. Success versus bankruptcy are stakes in the competition.
