400 Here For Boys' State

The largest session of Boys' State in the history of North Carolina opened here Sunday at the Institute of Government. The 405 rising high school seniors, sponsored by their local American Legion posts and chosen as outstanding students will be meeting here until Saturday.

Begun in 1939 by Mr. Albert Coates at the request of the American Legion, Boys' State is still using the same basic procedure, slightly modified through the years.

Realizing that "the average student was able to track Caesar and Cicero around Rome, but couldn't find his way around the county courthouse," Mr. Coates was determined to bridge the gap between the citizen of North Carolina and his state and local government.

Division Into Parties

As they arrived last Sunday afternoon, the boys were divided into fictitious cities and counties and arbitrarily assigned to fictitious political parties.

"We just put one boy into the Federalist party and the next into the Nationalist," stated Ed Allman, this year's director.

The four dormitories housing the boys, Aycock, Ruffin, Manly and Grimes, made the physical structure for the imaginary counties. Each floor then became a city whose officials were elected early in the week. The dozen cities then held party conventions to nominate county officials.

After rousing campaigns in all four dormitories, county elections will take place tonight.

Lectures Each Morning

In addition to the practical experience in the inner workings of politics, the boys, many of whom have never had a course in government, have heard lectures this week to supplement their knowledge. Topics ranged from "Public Welfare Responsibilities of City, County, State and Federal Government" to "UNC Basketball."

By Monday afternoon many of the boys were wondering whether they could stand the pace all week. As the political issues grew hotter with the weather, the boys became more enthusiastic. They are not always bright-eyed at 7:15 a.m. assembly, but they are there, and activities continue until lights out at 10:15 p.m.

Elections And Legislation

The big event is yet to come, however. Saturday is "Government in Action Day," the climax of the week's activities. Tomorrow state elections will be held by the boys, and Saturday the Legislature will meet in Knapp Auditorium.

A joint session of the Boys' State Senate and House will be addressed by their Governor, the highest officer and an honor to which each boy aspires. Then the General Assembly is to convene, and legislation will be passed on state and local levels with national resolutions also passed.

Current issues will probably be very seriously debated if past session are any indication of the present one. Last year's Boys' State went on record, after much intellectual debate, as universally not opposed to the proposed 3% sales tax on food, which was later adopted by the North Carolina Legislature.

Togetherness Is Issue

It is anybody's guess what the major issues will be this year, but the Boys' Staters are expected to pass their annual resolution that Boys' and Girls' state meet in a joint session next year; a resolution which is just as regularly ignored.

Girls' State, a similar program for rising high school senior girls, is being held this week at Women's College in Greensboro. The sessions are not always held concurrently, and not since 1947 when Terry Sanford was director, has there even been an exchange between the two groups. That year a picnic for Boys' and Girls' Staters was held.

Counselors for Boys' State were chosen from Carolina law students. President Friday and Chancellor Aycock were counsel-

Summer Officers Picked By Allen

Larry McDevitt, a rising junior and presidential assistant in the regular session, has been appointed Secretary-Treasurer of the summer school student body for the first session.

McDevitt heads a list of 31 appointees announced yesterday by summer school student body president Inman Allen. Allen said he was encouraged by the number of students who applied for the positions in interviews held last week.

Raine Remsburg will be Attorney General for the first session and will direct a staff of six members in investigating Honor Council cases. Members of his staff included Bob Rascoe, Richard Vinroot, Erskine Duff, William Bost, Bill Fearon and Clyde Benton.

Summer School Board

The seven students appointed to compose the Summer School Student Government Board are Doug Freeman, Larry Hinton, Billy Upchurch, Don Curtis and Haynes C. McFadden. This Board acts as the legislative body for the summer school student government.

Robin Farr will head a three-girl staff as Assistant Attorney General for the Women's Council. Her staff will include Robin Haney, Carol Mathews and Nancy Stovall.

The seven regular members of the Women's Council will be Carolyn Martin, Kay Taylor, Judy Shope, Kathy Fulenwider, Neal Hollingsworth, and Emy Novotny. Miss Martin and Miss Taylor are members of the regular session Council, as is Carolyn Pinion, chairman of the Women's Council for the first session.

Alternate Council Members

Martha Tate and Mary Shaw were appointed clerks for the Women's Council. In addition Allen instituted a new practice with the appointment of Judy Deal and Kay Fletcher as alternate members of the Council. He explained that they would serve on a rotating basis when regular members of the council were unable to attend a trial.

Alternates for the Men's Council are Lanny Bridges and Mike Michaels.

7 Coats Held By Chapel Hill Cops For Identification

Seven coats which are believed to have been stolen recently from the campus or Chapel Hill area are now being held at the Chapel Hill Police Department and may be claimed upon identification.

Police Chief Blake stated that the coats were recovered Saturday when Pittsboro police picked up a suspect near Pittsboro. No charges have been lodged against the man in Chapel Hill yet, the Chief stated, but are pending upon identification of the recovered items.

Five of the seven coats are three-quarter length London Fog raincoats. One has already been claimed, he said, by a student who thought he had left his coat in Lenoir Hall or Hill Hall. The others may be identified between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m. during the week.

Chief Blake stated the man had apparently worked in Chapel Hill in the past, and could have stolen the coats then.

A billfold which its owner said contained $300 was either lost or stolen Monday night after 10:45. Frank J. Rinaldi of the first floor Connor dorm stated Tuesday that the billfold was in his possession when he left Graham Memorial at that time, and that he believed he had the wallet when he returned to his room.

Information concerning the billfold may be reported to Rinaldi or to the Chapel Hill Police Department.

BOYS STATER BERNARD LEARY of Morehead City prepares to eat lunch in Lenoir Hall. Bernard is one of nearly 500 North Carolina high school seniors who are attending Boys State here this week. The students meet in the Institute of Government, eat in Lenoir Hall, and stay in the upper quad dormitories.
