Wake Forest Rift With Church Aired

RALEIGH (UPI) — The Executive Committee of the Baptist State Convention recommended today that a group from the Baptist organization and Wake Forest College explore their differences and try to close "a widening breach between the Convention and the college."

The recommendation was contained in a resolution appended to the report of the General Board when the report was introduced on the floor.

The resolution was a result of some last-hour meetings between dissident pastors and members of the Executive Committee. The 20 pastors had threatened to introduce a new slate of trustees for Wake Forest College when the Nominations Committee makes its report Thursday.

Action on the resolution and the General Board report was expected tonight.

The resolution said "the Executive Committee was aware of a widening breach between the school and the Convention and 'We have felt some responsibility in this apparent trend and have taken what we have considered to be appropriate steps toward improvement."

The commission said progress has been made during recent months but "we feel further exploration of this matter between the college and the Executive Committee would be fruitful and highly beneficial to the cause of Christ."

The controversy between Wake Forest and the Convention has simmered for years. It boiled anew when the public relations director of Wake Forest published a novel which 20 pastors disagreed with.

Senior Class To Sponsor Teacher Of Month Award

The Senior Class Cabinet met Monday night and discussed several of the projects for the class of '63.

Among those issues considered was the selection of the Faculty Award of the Month. The faculty member will be chosen on the basis of his contribution to the students in and out of the classroom.

The purpose of the award is to recognize excellence in lecturing and in the ability to stimulate the Academic interest of students.

The possibility of having a joint combo party with the Junior class was presented and will be investigated. Plans were begun for Senior Week in the Spring.

President Vinroot congratulated the Cabinet for work on the All-Campus Weekend in October.

Fear, Insecurity Basic In 'Miracle Worker' Role

By PATRICE PERRIN

"Show me what it feels like to walk around in a cemetery when it's dark."

"There's a hole in front of you."

"There's something behind you."

"See something?"

"Be afraid!" said Director Wes Van Tassel to a little blonde girl on the stage.

She was trying out for the role of Helen Keller in "The Miracle Worker."

The bright lights were on and her mother and father were watching somewhere out in the audience. So she closed her eyes to make it dark. It wasn't very hard to be scared.

Behind her sat eight other hair-twisting, fingernail-biting, leg-swinging little girls. Each was nervously waiting her turn and imagining how she could be deaf, blind, and mute just a little bit better.

In the audience a few students and parents watched the tryouts. The fathers smoked and the mothers worried.

"Are you sure she's too young?" said an eager mother behind Wes. A very small voice accompanied by big blue eyes peering out of golden curls and four raised fingers announced "I'm only four."

The director smiled, nodded and thanked the mother.

Van Tassel looked for a lot. In the adults he wanted good voice quality and sincerity. He was watched pronunciation. The character of Annie Sullivan was going to be hard to cast.

He needed a "miracle worker" in someone who knew how to bring out the best in a child. She must have depth enough to answer Helen's question "What is a soul?" and strength enough to force understanding on a dark mind.

Wes turned his thoughts to the thirty-five girls who wanted the role of Helen Keller. "Don't be inhibited, and don't ask me what that means," he said with a smile. He had made it all a game for them. They were all good but one would have to be excellent for theatre-in-the-round. There would be no stage settings and the audience attention had to be held with acting intensity. He had only until the 14th of December to rehearse.

Twenty little girls waited eagerly. "All right Susie, you're out in the woods and it's dark . . ."
