SHINE? THIS GIRL from the Carolina Women's Council may appear to be bowing before a boy's feet, but actually she is raising money for the Campus Chest. The CWC operated a shoe shine booth in the Y yesterday as part of this week's campaign to raise the Chest goal of $6,000. Secretary, Treasurer Also Named

By JOEL BULKLEY

The Student Party Tuesday night nominated Mike Lawler for President of the Student Party and Dick Ellis for Vice-President. The SP also endorsed Bonnie Hoyle for Secretary and Dick Akers for Treasurer.

Lawler cited the problems next year's president will be confronted with and pledged his efforts toward the authentic creation of a new vitality in the realm of student responsibility. He noted that the President must bring faculty, students and the administration together in order for a cooperative effort to propose solutions to the many campus problems.

Lawler said that the President must first lead the student body and then represent it, by the use of both imagination and diplomacy. He reported that areas needing improvement—campus social life, the freshman orientation program, fraternity finances and possible curriculum changes—should only be considered after the atmosphere, direction, and responsibility of student government at Carolina are improved.

Lawler said that each student must do his part to make his gift to the future that of a revitalized student life. He added that one of the biggest needs student government has now is for better communications which will in turn allow for the implementation of some needed changes within the realm of student responsibility.

George Rosenthal said last night that the Student Party not only needs reorganization but also re-direction if it is to reflect an active interest which is needed for the betterment of student government.

Dennis Yager, NSA East Coast Program Director, addressed the Congress, for which four delegates convention briefly last night and will be elected in the spring elections between the National Student outlined the relationship that exists, and NSA.

The University Party will conclude its spring nominating convention tonight, beginning at eight o'clock in Gerrard Hall. The UP will endorse fifty representatives for student legislature, four candidates for the National Student Association (NSA) and consider whether or not to endorse candidates for the presidency of the Carolina Athletic Association (CAA) and the Women's Athletic Council (WAA). Legislative endorsements will be based upon recommendations of the UP Executive Committee and the Legislative Reviewing committee. The reviewing committee has interviewed prospective candidates.

Late Monday night, the convention moved special orders and decided not to endorse any candidate seeking the Daily Tar Heel editorship. The convention also endorsed Richard Barrett as its nominee for vice-president of the senior class. All DTH candidates have been included to speak before the convention tonight.

Tickets Still Available For Playmakers 'Garden'

"The Chalk Garden," Enid Bagnold's acidly-witty stage hit, will open tonight at the Playmakers Theatre. The Carolina Playmakers production will run through Sunday.

Directed by Foster Fitz-Simons, "The Chalk Garden" boasts three of the state's best-known actresses in major roles. Louise Lamont will play Madrigal, the recently imprisoned governess. She appeared with Tallulah Bankhead in the Broadway production of "Her Cardboard Lover" and played opposite Cameron Mitchell in "Criminal at Large."

Marion Fitz-Simons, wife of the director, plays Mrs. St. Maugham. Mrs. Fitz-Simons numerous credits include national tours with the Borgny Hammer Ibsen Co. and female comic leads in the state's two leading outdoor dramas, "The Lost Colony" and "Unto These Hills."

Pro Musica To Appear Tonight

The New York Pro Musica will perform the seldom heard music of the Middle Ages and the Renaissance tonight in Memorial Hall at 8, sponsored by Graham Memorial. Under the direction of Noah Greenberg the group comprised of four instrumentalists and six vocalists have performed extensively in Europe including an engagement at Westminster Abbey. They are the first group to perform there.

The inspiration behind these distinctive music-makers began with Greenberg, who organized the group about 10 years ago. The new group was faced with many problems. First an extensive library of scholarly works dealing with medieval and Renaissance music had to be built up and the ancient instruments had to be collected. Then it was necessary to find highly qualified and dedicated musicians to interpret and play these early works (that have nothing except the note written down.)

However, the problems have been overcome. On their first tour of Europe they successfully performed the "Play of Daniel" an opera which hadn't been performed since the 13th century.

The early music of the five centuries from 1200 to 1700 is played on musical instruments of that time; recorders, an early transverse flute, cromornes (soft, double-reed wind instruments), harpsichord, viola da gamba, bass viol, rebec (medieval fiddle), psaltery, hurdy-gurdy, sackbut (an early form of trombone), bells and percussion.

I.D. cards required for the performance.

"CHALK GARDEN" ACTRESSES — Four well-known North Carolina actresses will play major roles in The Carolina Playmakers production of "The Chalk Garden," opening tonight at the Playmakers Theatre in Chapel Hill. They are (l. to r.) Louise Lamont, Marion Fitz-Simons, Mary Spearman and Josephine Pettis. The Enid Bagnold comedy will run through Sunday. Curtain time is 8:30 each evening, with an additional matinee performance Sunday at 2:30 p.m.

Consolidated University President William C. Friday—a man who's getting in the act more and more throughout the state where education is concerned—will become an actor for real when the Junior Class sponsors a skit March 21.

President Friday will portray a supposedly typical Carolina student who falls asleep in front of the TV set while studying.

Other cast members of the Student-Faculty Variety show, as the program has been dubbed, will include Dean of Women Katherine Carmichael among a host of others. The program is being held to raise money for Junior Class projects.

President Friday, whose prior experience as a thespian is not known as yet, was cast in the role of a sleepy student "because of his obvious awareness of the type," according to one of the members of the sponsoring group.

The plot of the drama, which "may propel President Friday to immediate stardom," according to a spokesman, has not been revealed.

"However," the spokesman said, "I'm sure it would tax the talents of even the most experienced actor."

Also not yet revealed is the role to be played by Miss Carmichael. Rumors that the dainty Dean of Women will portray a coed femme fatale were not confirmed yesterday.

Ethridge, Blanchard Issue Debate Offer

DTH co-editor candidates Dave Ethridge and Gary Blanchard yesterday challenged their opponents to a debate "to prove to the campus that our platform and our qualifications insure that we not only can but will improve the Tar Heel if we are elected."

"These two things—platform and qualifications—are the base upon which any improvement must rest," they said in a statement.

"If the platform is vague or ill-defined, or if it promises too much, chances are it will never be implemented."

"If the qualifications of the candidates are not high, then chances are equally good that the platform will never be implemented."

"A debate will allow the campus to judge at first-hand the feasibility of each platform and the competence of the candidate running on it."

"Of all campus posts, this is the one which most directly affects the student. He has to face that newspaper six days a week. It should be an interesting and informative encounter. Too often in the past this has not been the case."

"A debate will show that what the Tar Heel needs is not a policy review but a complete spiritual revamping, a sense of purpose, and a healthy dose of initiative, enthusiasm and competence."

"These are qualities you bring to a task, and in so doing you foster them in the people who are helping you to succeed at that task."

"We feel we have those qualities, plus the platform and experience needed to make good use of them."

"We challenge our opponents to prove that they are equally well-endowed."
