Negotiations To Be Topic Of COB Meet

The Chapel Hill Committee For Open Business (COB) will hold an open meeting tonight to evaluate progress being made by a committee of businessmen seeking the desegregation of the 14 remaining segregated establishments in Chapel Hill.

A progress report from the special committee of local businessmen, named recently by Mayor Sandy McClamroch, will be presented, according to Rev. Loren Mead, chairman of the Mayor's Committee on Human Relations.

The businessmen have been holding private meetings with owners of segregated businesses for the past ten days.

The rally will be held, beginning at eight o'clock, at St. Paul's AME Church, Merritt Mill Road. An overflow crowd is expected.

Anti-segregation protests were halted for a ten-day period, which ends today, while the private negotiations were carried on.

An open meeting of the COB voted last Thursday night to resume workshops for instruction in a non-violent direct action program of civil disobedience. Work-

1 Killed, 2 Hurt As Car Crashes On Austrian Trip

A UNC student was killed and two others injured in an automobile accident July 19 near Kriegalach in East Central Austria.

Larry Morris Kramer, 25, of Whiteville was killed while Ralph Holland Falls, 23, of Gastonia and Augusto Belmont, 21, of Lima, Peru were injured. Both were reported to be in serious condition in Muerzzuschlag Hospital.

Police said the driver of the American car apparently fell asleep and the car crashed into an oncoming truck.

The students were enroute from Italy to Vienna.

Kramer, a rising third year student in the University's Law School, was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Isadore Kramer of Whiteville. He received his A.B. degree from the University in 1960.

Burial was in the High Point Cemetery.

Falls is a rising third-year student in the Institute of Government here.

Kramer and Falls had flown to London aboard a Graham Memorial chartered flight on June 11.

Whether or not Belmont is a student here is not known.

Group Backs Speaker Ban In Resolution

The North Carolina Department of the American Legion this week accused the University of violating a 1941 speaker ban statute and lashed out at Gov. Terry Sanford in his position as chairman of the Board of Trustees.

In a resolution adopted here July 7 by its executive committee but released this week for the first time, the Legion accused UNC officials of breaking the law by allowing Milton Rosen, national chairman of the Progressive Labor Party, to speak on the campus at Chapel Hill.

A "Known Subversive"

The resolution said Rosen was a "known subversive" and said that the law broken was one adopted by the General Assembly in 1941 setting up penalties for anyone allowing public buildings to be used for the purpose of advocating the overthrow of the government "by force, violence or other illegal means."

Chancellor William B. Aycock said in reply to the charge, "I do not know of any University official who has violated the 1941 statute."

Rosen's Speech

Rosen, who spoke here last December 3, was sponsored by the New Left Club, a recognized student political discussion group.

He presented the basis for a socialist movement in the United States, which he said would come

John Knowles Confirmed As First Writer-In-Residence

By ETADIN MOLADNU

Author John Knowles will be UNC's first formal Writer-in-Residence, beginning this fall, according to an announcement made this week.

Final confirmation of the program had been expected since early April when Knowles' acceptance of UNC's invitation was first received.

Knowles is expected to arrive in Chapel Hill on September 10.

A former associate editor of "Holiday" magazine, Knowles is the author of two novels, A Separate Peace, published by Macmillan in 1960 for which he won three awards, and Morning at Antibes, published by Macmillan in 1962. He has also written a number of stories and articles which have appeared in the "Saturday Evening Post," "Story," "New World Writing," "Reader's Digest," and "Holiday."

As Writer-in-Residence, Knowles will teach one class in creative writing to a small number of students. He will also periodically lecture to other writing-related classes in such departments as Radio Television, and Moton Pictures Dramatic Art and the School of Journalism.

He will have an office in the Department of English and will also participate in projects with extra-curricular groups.

An informal committee of students and faculty has been working since last fall to establish a writer-in-residence program.

The program has received wholehearted encouragement from the University's Board of Trustees, a favorable resolution from Student Legislature, the blessings of academic departments concerned with the teaching of writing, and most important, full financial support of the project from Chancellor William B. Aycock.

As the proposal evolved over a period of months, it became something very different from the normal writer's residency which has become a fixture at colleges all over the land, and promises to be a boon both to students and the writer himself.

He may be called upon to give one or two open lectures during the time he is here and a few talks to classes. The bulk of his time is expected to go toward talking with students who want to write, or are in the process of learning.

His salary is expected to come directly from Chancellor Aycock, and his schedule, such as it is, will probably be regulated by a student-faculty committee which will screen requests for his services and consult with him on what he needs in the way of time to pursue his own writing.

One significant difference between the proposed UNC setup and similar programs at other institutions is that a maximum freedom to write will be permitted the author.

Another is that the idea for the project was student-origin-

2 UNC Students End Cuban Trip; May Face Trial

Two UNC students who violated a State Department ruling and flew to Cuba via Prague, Czechoslovakia along with 57 other students from colleges around the country concluded their month-long tour of the island early this week.

Larry Phelps and John Salter, both former students here, defied the U. S. Government earlier this summer by flying to Cuba in direct violation of a State Department ruling that all travel to the island by American citizens must be authorized through a special visa supplied by the Department.

Both students, along with the 56 others who will return to the United States next week, were given special passports by the State Department earlier this week for their return trip.

One student was reported to have drowned in a swimming pool while visiting the island. The Castro
