

Aid To Education Doubtful

WASHINGTON (CSP) — A massive aid program aimed at the U.S. college student has slim chances of getting through Congress this year.

Casting a shadow of doubts over the higher education program is the upcoming civil rights bill battle in the Senate. No one knows for sure how long the Senate will be embroiled in what promises to be a long, bitter fight over the most sweeping integration measure since reconstruction days. Best estimates now see a congressional snarl imposed on other major legislation until the Senate finishes the civil rights bill — one way or another — by late fall.

Still pending in committee are House and Senate versions of mammoth student aid programs to get able but dollar-short students through college.

Getting strong administration support is the Senate version, introduced this month by Sen. Vance Hartke (D-Ind.). It comprises ideas germinating in the White House, the Office of Education and congressional circles of higher education supporters.

Similar to the Hartke bill — but containing enough differences for a tough compromise fight — is an old program of Rep. Edith Green (D-Ore.). Mrs. Green, chairman of the House Education Subcommittee, was defeated when backing the same plan last year in a conference committee.

Both House and Senate backers fear that the civil rights bill will eat up congressional attention until the November elections.

Even if the fight is finished by August, they will be hard pressed for supporters bent on stumping for reelection.

Any last minute attention before campaigning or racing to the summer national party conventions will probably be directed at higher-priority programs such as the administration's war on poverty.

The only glimmer of hope could come from decisive action by Senate supporters of the civil rights package. It would be imposed on southern filibuster forces early in the debate.

Closure, however, is a dirty word to both Sen. Mike Mansfield, Senate Democratic leader, and Sen. Everett M. Dirksen, his GOP counterpart.

While the two support the civil rights package passed by the House Feb. 10, Dirksen has some strong objections to the key public accommodations and fair employment practices sections. Pacifying the voice of the Senate GOP, however, could be a compromise on the most controversial sections.

Here's how the House and Senate versions of the student aid program look: (The House version is in the form of an amendment to the National Defense Education Act (NDEA).)

LOANS — Senate would increase NDEA loans to $200 million in 1965 and $250 million in next three years. House would increase loans to $150 million a year. Both would remove $900,000 ceiling on loans to individual institutions.

Senate would increase total loan to undergraduate students to $1,500, graduate students to $2,500. House would maintain current $1,000 annual loan for undergrads, but would increase to Senate level for grad students. Both would extend forgiveness feature to college, private elementary and secondary school teachers.

SCHOLARSHIPS — The Senate would authorize $37.5 million a year for four years in scholarships to students winning them on competitive and financial need basis. They would be $1,000 a year for four years. House under NDEA, would increase current graduate fellowships to 5,000 in 1965, 7,500 in 1966 and 10,000 by 1967.

LOAN INSURANCE — Not provided by House. Senate would authorize initial expenditure of $1 million for insurance on commercial loans made by college students not exceeding $2,000 a year. It would carry a low government interest rate, and loans would be insured up to 90 percent.

WORK STUDY PROGRAM — Not provided by House. Senate would authorize $250 million a year for four years to finance working-study programs. Undergrad student could earn up to $1,250 during two semesters while a grad student could earn $2,500. The federal share of the institutions' payments to the students would be 100 percent in the first year, 75 percent in succeeding years.

CORRECTION

The Daily Tar Heel regrets the error it printed in its Tuesday issue that Dr. Robert Osborn was convicted of a trespass charge and sentenced to 60 days on the roads. The article should have said Dr. David Smith was found guilty of trespass and sentenced to 60 days on the roads.

Applications Will Be Four Times Too High: Friday

There will probably be about four times as many applicants to the Consolidated University as the University can enroll next fall. President William C. Friday told the UNC board of trustees here recently.

Rate of applications are running about 20 per cent ahead of last year at the Raleigh and Greensboro institutions, he said.

Friday said that University facilities were not capable of handling such a great increase in the student body at the present time.

"The pressure is on us now," he said. "We had thought the overwhelming pressure wouldn't come until 1965, but it's now . . ." and things indicate that the situation will get worse before it gets better.

The only solution to the problem is more money.

— Money to establish more comprehensive community colleges.

— Money to expand existing facilities and facilities.

— Money to encourage the expansion of private colleges in the state.

"If these needs are not met, then priorities for admission must be established.

"The increasing competition is not going to abate," Friday said. "We are not falling behind, but we are not gaining ground in any marked way. We are still behind."
