AN EDITORIAL

The Question Still Remains Unanswered

Judge Raymond Mallard has managed to leave a cloud of uncertainty hanging over the Orange County Superior Court which can only do violence to the free flow of justice in his court in the future.

After a careful reading of his decision in Editor Gary Blanchard's contempt of court hearing, it appears that Judge Mallard has found Blanchard guilty of contempt, but then discharged him without penalty. It is still uncertain whether Blanchard now has a criminal record for this conviction, but even more important it is uncertain whether a citizen can go into Judge Mallard's Court and give his honest opinion on a matter when asked to—with any assurance that he too will not be cited for contempt.

This undercuts one of the basic concepts that citizens of the United States hold about their court system. One should feel that there is no safer place in this country than a court room, if he is telling the truth and has committed no crime. This is obviously no longer the case.

It also would seem to be incumbent upon the judge to define his ruling in any area in which he chooses to operate. After all, he started this whole thing by telling Blanchard to return to court to face a contempt charge after the trial of William Wynn was over. It would seem that the Judge could at least finish what he started so that witnesses in the future might know if they could express an honest opinion in his court when asked. If he found Blanchard guilty of contempt he should have said so in unequivocal terms and punished him; if not, he should have dismissed the charge and said specifically he did not find the defendant in contempt.

Instead of this, Mallard tried to have his cake and eat it too. He found Blanchard guilty but refused to mete out a sentence, leaving Blanchard with little or no recourse, since appeal is virtually impossible in these circumstances.

It would also seem to be the responsibility of a judge to warn a witness that answering a particular question could put him in jeopardy of a contempt citation. While the Judge is not forced to rule if no objection is lodged, this would not seem to relieve him of his obligation to inform laymen of what the law is.

Blanchard answered the question put to him honestly. It is a matter of doubt whether Judge Mallard answered the question he raised as honestly.—DAVID ETHRIDGE.

Rides Tonight Start Carnival Time Here

By JOHN GREENBACKER

Gambling, lottery and other mild vices will become legal for all UNC students tomorrow at the Campus Chest Carnival, all in the name of charity of course. All rides will be in full swing tonight from 4-8 p.m.

An enterprising student with money can buy the time of an East Cobb coed, if he happens to choose her legs from an assortment of others behind a curtain. Some fortunate male will have the chance of showing the Carnival beauty queen a good time with all expenses paid if she happens to draw his lot from hundreds of others.

The queen of the Carnival will actually be the queen of the Varsity-Alumni Game, who will have her name announced at the game earlier in the afternoon.

Penn Premier Shows, the largest traveling carnival in the East, will provide rides for the day, and will feature a special mystery ride from Germany. All rides will cost 25c.

Fifty booths sponsored by clubs, residence halls, sororities and fraternities will provide assorted side entertainment at 10c a throw.

For those with sadistic tendencies, there will be numerous fraternity-sponsored booths which will allow the customer to plaster pathetic pledges with various types of goo.

For the politically minded, the Young Democratic Club will sponsor donkey rides and local Richardson Preyer supporters will sponsor a "Pitch for Preyer" booth.

For the mentally disturbed, Nurses Dorm and Ehringhaus Residence Hall will sponsor a "Lucy Psychiatric Booth."

For the hardened criminal, there will be a jail booth which for commitment costs and the youthful incorrigible for his room.

For the plain old grubby individual there will be a greased pig race.

Carnival Planner Jim Light has been very pleased with the variety and originality of this year's booths.

"I think we have a lot more original ideas this year than I've seen in the last two years," he said. "We have more amusements for all ages."

The Carnival's hours will be 1-7 p.m. Bring money.

CCC Will Lobby For CR Passage

By KERRY SIPE

Joseph Straley, chairman of the Chapel Hill Committee of Concerned Citizens (CCC), said yesterday that members of the group would be sent to Washington in the near future to lobby in favor of the civil rights bill currently before the Senate.

The CCC is a local organization primarily concerned with local civil rights problems.

"Most of our attention is still on the Chapel Hill area," Straley said. "We believe that we should have our own local law without having Washington force one on us."

"The move to shift our attention to a national level is due strictly to the uncooperativeness of the Chapel Hill Board of Aldermen," he said.

Straley said the first lobbying group will probably leave for Washington on Monday or Tuesday of next week.

The group is currently communicating with other lobbying groups in Washington. "We are studying the situation thoroughly before we make any contacts," Straley said.

The Committee is in correspondence with lobbyists from the National Council of Churches and the United Auto Workers Union.

"Professor Dan Pollitt educated us on the particulars of the bill at our last meeting," he said. "We want to learn as much about the situation as possible."

Lists are being made of members of the Senate who are in favor of the bill, those who are opposed and those who are not yet committed. The group will direct their actions toward those who

Powder Puff Football Game Today

By MAT FRIEDMAN

Can Billy Cunningham's "Blue Bruisers" stop Harrison Merrill's "Red Rompers"?

That's the question no one has been asking. But at three this afternoon in Kenan Stadium, 50 coeds will provide a hilarious answer anyway in the "Junior Class Girls Powder Puff Football Game." Admission is $25.

They finally got Merrill out of that pool in New Hampshire and back to Chapel Hill. Now he's busy whipping 25 females into shape for today's fiasco.

At the rate he's going, they say, his girls should be ready—for the infirmary. You see, he's been making them run wind-sprints and take calisthenics. Everybody knows that's not fair. Carolina coeds never run—they are chased.

Coach Cunningham stirred up a little pre-game controversy yesterday by accusing Merrill of sending a spy to watch the Blue Bruisers practice. Merrill denied the charge. He said he's been doing his own spying. He confessed that the huddles have been most revealing.

Many of the varsity football players watching the practices observed that the workouts have been amazingly tough. One junior tackle said his tongue was hanging out just from watching.

Everyone is still astonished by the fifty-yard touch-down run in Monday's practice, a game which ended 6-0. They are astonished because no one knows who made the run or who won the game.

All reports are that the contest will be wide open. All sorts of passes have been made in the practices and more of the same is expected today. Both coaches have been working on sweeps and pitchouts.

As far as size is concerned, the teams are pretty equal.

Merrill's girls average 36-25-35 and Cunningham's 35-25-36. The difference, rumors go, is attributed to the fact that Billy's team figures to sit on the ball.

But at three today, all rumors will be forgotten when one girl puts her foot to the ball for the opening kickoff. Then, if she doesn't stub her toe, the GAME will be under way.

Oh, by the way, Merrill is still hoping for rain so his team can swim.
