'Arms And The Man'

Fulbright Starts CS In Memorial

Senator J. William Fulbright, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, will speak in Memorial Hall at 8 tonight to open the Carolina Symposium.

He will hold a news conference today at 5:15 p.m. which will be heard live over WUNC radio. Newsmen from all over the nation will attend, including Max Frankel of the New York Times.

It is hoped that Fulbright will elaborate on a foreign policy speech he made on the Senate floor March 25, in which he urged the nation to stop "clinging to old myths in the face of new realities."

Fulbright advocated a major revision in American foreign policy by asking the American people to stop looking upon the world's Communist nations as a block of inseparable states with its headquarters in Moscow.

"In the Cuban missile crisis of October, 1962, the United States proved to the Soviet Union that a policy of aggression and adventure involved unacceptable risks," he said.

Fulbright believes that with the present lowering of world tension, it is in the best interest of the nation to "cut loose from established myths and to start thinking some 'unthinkable thoughts'—about the Cold War and East-West relations, about the underdeveloped countries and particularly those in Latin America, about the changing nature of the Chinese Communist threat in Asia and about the festering war in Viet Nam."

Fulbright was born in Mississippi and received his education at the University of Arkansas, Oxford University in England and George Washington Law School.

After several years as an attorney for the Justice Department, he taught at the University of Arkansas and became president of that institution in 1939.

He ran successfully for the House of Representatives in 1942 and was the author of the Fulbright Resolution of 1943 which precipitated the organization of the United Nations.

He became a senator in 1944, and held positions on the Banking and Currency and Foreign Relations Committees.

Earlier in 1962 he was appointed a member of the U. S. Delegation to the U. N. General Assembly.

A leader in the move to encourage the late Senator Joseph McCarthy in 1954, Fulbright is famous for the statement, "Democracy is more likely to be destroyed by perversion of, or abandonment of, its true moral principles than by armed attack from Russia."

Huge Rocket Goes On Display Here

By DONNA FAGG
A BOMARC interceptor missile for air defense has been sent by the United States Air Force for display during the Carolina Symposium.
This missile, long range and supersonic, is designed to intercept enemy aircraft while they are still far from our borders. It has a wing span of 18 feet and a gross weight of 15,000 pounds. Traveling faster than the speed of sound at an extreme altitude, it can deliver either a conventional or a nuclear warhead more than 250 miles.
The U. S. Army is setting up an exhibit in Morehead Planetarium during Symposium entitled The Soldier—Key to Power. The five-piece display portrays the critical skills and essential qualities of the modern men who serve in Army uniform.
Included in the multi-unit exhibit is a 10-minute film documentary of the soldier from World War II to Vietnam.
Exhibits have been set up in Wilson Library by the committee headed by Mike Bissell. "Arms and the Man" is illustrated in the display cases at the main entrance, and a mobile with the names of the speakers throughout the week hangs in the hallway.
A film short in connection with the week's topic is to be run at the local theatres. The Intimate Bookshop has set up an exhibit of books which various speakers have written.

Hesse Is Chairman

Symposium Committees Are Responsible For Success

By VANCE BARRON, JR.

The core of Symposium activity, an office on the second floor of the Y building, unlike the eye of a hurricane, has been a scene of unmitigated confusion for the past three months. Yet out of this chaos has emerged what promises to be the finest Carolina Symposium ever.

The history of this year's Symposium is set forth in its committees, from its genesis in the Interim Committee to the Handbook Committee that will commit the Symposium to history and posterity.

How did the Symposium ever make its way out of the wilderness and into the promised land? Most of the credit must go to the able chairman, Dick Hesse, but this modern-day epic has literally a cast of thousands.

The work of formulating the theme of this year's Symposium was begun in the spring of last year. Grey Temple was chairman of the Interim Committee set up by the previous Symposium. This committee provided the transition and continuity from the old to the new. This year's officers were chosen and given the responsibility of seeing that the word became flesh.

Assisting Hesse, there are Bill Davis, Executive Secretary; Steve Dennis, Vice-Chairman; Bev Haynes, secretary; and Al Sneed, Treasurer. The faculty advisor, surreptitiously known as "the great white father" of the Symposium, is Dr. David Lapkin of the Department of Economics.

The spotlight then shifts to the Program Committee, under the direction of Steve Dennis. This committee set about planning a schedule of the five-day affair and began to persuade prophets from foreign parts to come and hold forth. A group of 30 faculty members and students met last spring and hashed out the final topic: "Arms and the Man: National Security and the Aims of a Free Society."

Of course, at the bottom of every successful operation, there is that vital commodity: money. The task of securing this fell to "Evil Al" Sneed (he is at the root of all money), Treasurer and chairman of the Finance Committee. Individuals, groups and foundations from all over the state were approached and asked to support the Symposium. Governor Terry Sanford and Pres. William Friday aided in this operation.

When school opened in the fall, the Symposium had money in the bank and very little of anything else except a faith that their hopes would materialize. Campus organizations, fraternities, sororities and dormitories were asked to contribute, and the work of finding speakers went on.

The operations began to gather momentum as the Symposium moved out of the planning stage under the work of its committees.

Steve Dennis began making arrangements with his committee for the Intercollegiate Seminar. This will bring students from all over the nation to attend the Symposium and discuss the topic with some of the speakers. Larry Ehrhart is vice-chairman of this committee.

The Related Discussions Committee, under the direction of Bill Graham, Emily Klyce and Vance Barron set up meetings in dorms, fraternity and sorority houses where faculty members and students met to discuss "Arms and the Man."

No student could escape being familiar with the 1964 Symposium, however, if he

Edit Writers Hear Esser On Friday

Some towns and counties in N.C. are going to be left behind in the race for new industry, and it's going to be necessary for many people in some poverty stricken sections of the state to migrate from rural areas to urban centers where industry prospers, it was declared here Friday night by George Esser, director of the N.C. Fund, who described the problems of joblessness, sickness, poverty, and too slow industrialization to keep pace with farm unemployment.

Speaking at the N.C. Conference of Editorial Writers, he said Ford Foundation financed the $14 million N.C. Fund drive to find not one, but many ways of relieving poverty, and the total community approach appears to be the best way.

"Many rural and agricultural counties throughout North Carolina which face unemployment for many of its people are trying desperately to attract new industry to produce new jobs and give a balanced economy in many localities over the state. However, there isn't that much industry available for all who want and need it," said Esser. "Therefore, it is inevitable that many of the unemployed must migrate to other places, to be trained in new skills and to be able to hold down different kinds of jobs."

Red Carpet Is Out For CS Speakers

By MAIDA BURCH

In honor of keynote speaker Senator William Fulbright, the 1964 Carolina Symposium will open its week of lectures, seminars and informal gatherings with a banquet at the Morehead Planetarium dining room tonight.

The members of all Symposium committees, faculty members, administrative officials and townspeople will attend.

The Social and Hospitality Committee has planned luncheons and dinners through the week for the speakers who will deliver formal lectures and panel discussions. These are to be attended by invitation.

The Economics Department will entertain Emile Benoit for lunch on Monday, and William Barnes and Otto Eckstein on Tuesday.

The YMCA-YWCA plan to honor Douglas Maitland Knight at a luncheon, and Dr. Robert Davis of the Mathematics Department will entertain Harold Orlans and Paul Gross.

Irving Howe, Marya Mannes, and John Knowles will attend a luncheon given by the English Honors students and faculty advisors, and the creative writing honors students and professors.

The Carolina Playmakers will entertain Richard Adler at a

Bershak Award To Hennessee

The Andrew Bershak Interfraternity Scholarship for four years of study at UNC has been awarded to Keith Corwyn Hennessee of Wilkesboro, it was announced today by the Office of Student Aid.

Hennessee is a student at Wilkes Central High School.
The Bershak scholarship is worth $600 per year for four years of study. Established in 1948, the scholarship fund is composed of contributions from UNC students who are members of social fraternities. It was established as a memorial to Andrew Bershak, class of 1938, who was an All-American football star.

Assembly Candidates

4 Of 5 Oppose Gag Law

Four of the five candidates seeking nomination to Orange County's State House and Senate seats in the May Democratic Primary favor outright repeal of North Carolina's Speaker Ban Law.
Ed Hamblin and Gordon Cleveland, candidates for the House seat, and Don Matheson and Robert Midgette, candidates for the Senate seat, all called for immediate repeal.
Donald Stanford, a candidate for the House seat, stood alone in suggesting possible amendment rather than repeal.
The candidates gave their views on the Gag Law in answer to questions put to them by The Chapel Hill Weekly. Each candidate was asked: "Do you think the Speaker Ban Law should be repealed by the 1965 General Assembly? Amended, and if so, how? How do you feel generally about the law as it pertains to freedom of speech and academic freedom? Do you think its benefits, if any, have outweighed any adverse effects that it might have had on the University?"

Both of the candidates for the Senate stood flatly for repeal. Matheson, retired Orange County farm agent and a resident of Hillsboro, said, "The Speaker Ban Law, hurriedly passed by the 1963 Legislature is a bad law and should be repealed." Midgette, a Chapel Hill attorney, said, "The Speaker Ban Law does not effectively protect . . . and can be harmful . . . I am inclined therefore to favor repeal."

Two of the three candidates for the House were equally direct in calling for repeal. Cleveland, a political science professor at the University, said, "I firmly believe reconsideration by the 1965 General Assembly, with full hearings, will demonstrate to the people of North Carolina, the wisdom of repealing the Speaker Ban outright . . ." Hamblin, a resident of Hillsboro and publisher of The News of Orange County, said, "Immediate repeal by the 1965 Legislature would be in order."

Stanford, a resident of Chapel Hill and a dairy farmer, said in suggesting amendment rather than repeal, "The repeal of the Speaker Ban Law in the 1965 General Assembly is an impractical consideration in view of the strong Statewide sentiment in favor of the action taken by the 1963 Assembly . . . It is more practical to reconsider the law with the idea of an amendment,"
