

DCCAPDD Is 'Final Word' Of Summer Coed Fashions

The Daily Tar Heel is not the final word in fashion. For that matter neither are the numerous fashion magazines that line drug store racks.

The final word (The Dean of Coeds Committee on Absolutely Proper Dress and Decorum) has issued this statement to the DTH:

"Spring is alive with high styles this year for the children on campus. That is, high styles for garments from the waist up and low style for garments from the waist down.

"Dress collars employ a cute Peter Pan style this year but watch that the fabric doesn't tickle your eyebrows.

"For seniors who want that daring look, the lace may be taken off the collar, allowing the neckline to plunge to the Adam's Apple.

"Hemlines are up this year and should barely touch the ground as graceful coeds walk across campus and should fully cover the legs as they sit in buggies awaiting the cabman to drive.

"A wonderful innovation brought in last year by the long-haired girls and will be popular this year. That's knee-length boots, and they'll nicely replace the high-top shoes that are such popular pieces of the coed wardrobe.

"One cute addition to coed accessories is a darling ring with a poison spike on the inside. Nothing is more useful when a fresh male tries to hold hands. Coeds, however, need not wear the rings when they date gentlemen from Duke.

"For that weekend at the beach with mother and daddy, no coed should be without the comfortable 14-pound, five-piece swimsuit that is so popular. But remember, black is the only color.

"And guess what girls! Topless swimwear is in. That's right, you don't have to wear a bathing cap. That is unless you actually go into the water.

"And for the girl who really wants to be daring, Madras handkerchiefs are available in all sorts of pretty shades. However, these should never be seen by a gentleman.

"Other needed items are 200

hats, 242 petticoats, a walking in store for undergarments, but stick or black umbrella and an if any questions as to style arise, opera coat (for the Free Flick), the DCCAPDD will gladly answer them. "Of course few changes are swer them."
