2 Vice-Chancellor Assistants Named

Appointments of two assistant vice-chancellors — one for academic and one for health affairs — were announced this week by Vice Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson as part of the administrative reorganization begun last month.

Dr. Claiborne S. Jones, professor of zoology and associate dean of the General College, was named assistant vice chancellor for academic affairs.

Dr. George P. Manire, professor of bacteriology and immunology at the School of Medicine, was named assistant vice chancellor for health affairs.

The new appointments are a phase of the reorganization plan designed to increase cooperation between the Division of Academic Affairs and the Division of Health Affairs. Both divisions are now headed by Sitterson, who took over the new position of vice chancellor July 1.

The two new appointees will work with Sitterson in coordinating the work of both divisions.

The total plan for reshaping channels of administrative authority to achieve greater unity within the University was announced last month by Chancellor Paul F. Sharp. The plan was approved by the executive committee of the University Board of Trustees on June 17.

Shortly after his appointment as vice chancellor three weeks ago, Sitterson explained the reorganization saying it "will enable us to reach decisions, having in mind the total function of the University.

"No one will be making broad policy decisions without full knowledge of other areas."

Commission Gives Priority To Study Of Accreditation

RALEIGH — The speaker ban study commission mapped out plans for future public hearings yesterday, and agreed to hear officials of the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools at its next session.

The nine-member panel, holding its first meeting in the Legislative Building here, also appointed a sub-committee to investigate the legal aspects of the law.

The decision to first hear association officials came after commission member W. T. Joyner objected to the hearing schedule suggested by commission chairman David Britt.

Britt said it "seems the next two logical steps" would be to "let those who want to be heard, both pro and con" appear before the panel, then "investigate this matter of accreditation . . . invite members of the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools to give direct information in public meetings on this matter."

However, Joyner suggested that the public hearings might "be more meaningful after we have gotten some information (on accreditation) that is a matter of record."

"I have practically no information about technical, legal or practical relationships between the University and the accrediting association."

Commission member Gordon Haynes agreed with Joyner, saying: "I don't know anything about it."

"I know as little about it as anybody in this group," Britt added.

The legislative bill establishing the commission requires the panel to investigate the question of loss of accreditation by state-supported schools. The association notified Gov. Dan K. Moore last spring that accreditation is in danger because of the speaker ban law which prohibits Communists and Fifth Amendment pleaders from speaking on state-supported campuses.

The commission also agreed to hear at its next session members of the American Association of University Professors and officials from the federal government and any foundations which grant money or resources to state-supported schools.

Tentative dates for the next meeting are Aug. 11, 12 and 13. Britt said the next session would probably cover two of those days. Britt suggested that a meeting not be held until that time because "several members" of the commission are planning vacations "during the last week of July or the first week of August."

The five lawyers on the commission will compose the sub-committee to investigate the law's legal status. Included are Britt, Joyner, Russell Kirby, A. A. Zollicoffer and Lacy Thornburg.

Britt said the sub-committee would not "delay the workings of the commission." He said the group will "give a look at legal aspects of the law and do research" on its constitutionality.

Commission members agreed to hold sessions open to the public "for the foreseeable future." However, some members indicated that later sessions may be held in private. "We must become not only an investigative body, but a deliberating body, as Joyner said.

The commission said the opportunity to speak before the panel would be given to "interested parties," whether individuals or representatives of organizations. However, the commission stipulated that persons wishing to speak must present a summary statement of their background and views prior to the talk.

Britt began the meeting with this statement: "We don't know where we're going, and we don't know exactly where we're going to wind up. Frankly, I wouldn't want it to be otherwise. . . I don't know the answer. . . We will work hard, reason together and come up with some sort of reasonable answer."

SG Executive Branch Plans Special Unit

A special department to deal with long-range planning will be added to the executive branch of Student Government before September, according to Student Body President Paul Dickson.

The department, to be headed by a director of long-range planning, will be divided into four commissions, each to deal with a specific area.

The department will be based on recommendations made in a report to Dickson on "Student Government and the Academically Talented Student." The six-page report, submitted to Dickson in June, recommended these commissions:

— A commission on student mental health to study the entire problem of students from diverse backgrounds adjusting

Former Student, Fund Volunteer, Target Of Shots

"We were just riding down the road, when the shot was fired. Our first reaction was one of disbelief — we couldn't understand the shot."

Leonidas J. Capetanos, a former UNC student currently working with the North Carolina Fund, yesterday described the incident Sunday in Craven County, in which a white man fired at the car in which Capetanos and two others were riding.

"We sped away and were out of sight almost immediately," Capetanos said.

Capetanos was riding in a car being driven by Frank Ingram. They were driving into New Bern when the shooting occurred.

The Fund Volunteers, a racially integrated group, were working on an anti-poverty project in Craven County.
