(Continued from Page 1) notes that this gap could be closed were the South to increase its tax support for education by another five per cent:

"Were the Southern states to adopt the expenditure pattern of the Middle and Far Western states, and devote as much as 12 or 13 per cent of existing tax revenues to higher education, the region could immediately abolish any financial constraint on the provision of high-quality education and also partially close the gap of numbers."

Cartter notes: "Other regions of the nation can afford the luxury of simultaneous growth in all their colleges and universities."

"The South, however, will dissipate its resources and continue to be a follower rather than a leader if it is not successful in establishing clear priorities."

Cartter allocated a major part of his report to North Carolina in general and UNC in particular, rating UNC among the top three Southern universities when rated by a number criteria.

According to Cartter's report, North Carolina spends about 7.95 per cent of its total tax revenue on higher education.

Cartter ranked UNC third in average faculty compensation with $11,300. Of the institutions studied, Duke ranked first with $12,800; Rice second, with $11,700; and Baylor last with $7,600.

Other institutions included were Virginia, $11,000; Vanderbilt, $10,600; Texas, $10,300; Houston, $10,200; Georgia Tech, $10,200; and Tulane and Florida State, $10,000.

UNC also ranked among the top Southern institutions in total library expenditures.

UNC Benefactor William R. Kenan Is Dead At 93

UNC benefactor William Rand Kenan died Wednesday at his Lockport, N. Y., summer home. He was 93.

The silver-haired millionaire was the man who in 1926 provided the $275,000 for the building of Kenan Stadium. The 24,000-seat stadium was dedicated in 1927. Later Kenan provided the steel bleachers which increased seating capacity to 44,000.

He also donated $150,000 for a guest box and a new press box, and gave $28,000 for a field house.

While at the University, Kenan was the discoverer, with Dr. Francis P. Venable, of the commercial use of car-bide.

He won letters here in football and baseball, and was graduated in 1894 with a B.S. degree.

-Immunity-

(Continued from Page 1) he had not been aware of the existing University regulations guaranteeing the right of faculty members to speak out on public issues.

Carver said the letter was written on behalf of the Legion on the recommendation of the organization's legislative committee, headed by attorney John McRae of Charlotte.

Dean of the Faculty James Godfrey said the letter to Friday "came as a surprise. I was quite unprepared for a request of that nature to the president of this University."

The University laws relating to faculty members' rights to express their own views contain this section:

(A) Academic freedom is the right of a faculty member to be responsibly engaged in efforts to discover, speak, and teach the truth. It is the policy of the University to maintain and encourage full freedom, within the law, of inquiry, discourse, teaching, research, and publication and to protect any member of the academic staff against influences, from within or without the University, which would restrict him in the exercise of these freedoms in his area of scholarly interest.

(B) The University recognizes that in his role as citizen, as to matters outside the area of his scholarly interest, the faculty member has the right to enjoy the same freedoms as other citizens, without institutional censorship or discipline, though he should avoid abuse of these freedoms. He should recognize that accuracy, forthrightness and dignity befit his association with the University and his position as a man of learning. He should not represent himself as a spokesman for the University.

-Grad School-

Cartter said that none of the Southern institutions studied ranked with the nations ten best, but that some placed in the category of the 10 next best on one or more of the rating scales used.

Two of the reasons for keeping Southern institutions out of the top rating were overall financial support and average faculty compensation.

"The Southern universities fare better in the comparison of annual library expenditures, the average falling between the first and second national groups. . . . In the 'millionaire' library class in the South today are Texas, Duke, Virginia, UNC, LSU, Florida, and Kentucky in approximate order."

According to Cartter's report only Texas, UNC, Duke, Emory and Florida State scored above the norm for research income for the third highest group of institutions, including 23rd through 48th.

-Freshman-

(Continued from Page 1) who met the established minimum standards, so I chose them on the basis of academic qualifications," Bernard said. Bernard said if he had been required to accept those meeting the minimum standards on a first-come, first-served basis, the freshman class would have been filled by the end of January.

He is not required by law to accept all North Carolina high school graduates, Bernard said. He was forced to operate on the basis of a freshman class of about 2,100. While it was possible for him to admit more than the 2,100 by projecting past withdrawals of applications, some decision had to be made about rejections.

By using the predicted grade average (proved to be 80 to 85 per cent accurate), Bernard was able to admit all those who stood a fair chance of success in the University, he said.

Students who met the 1.6 average requirement but fell below the 2.0 line totaled 1,001. In addition, 188 North Carolina students who were qualified academically but did not complete all requirements for their application were not accepted.

Out-of-state freshmen are held to a higher standard than in-state students, because of the quota system which keeps the ratio of in-state to out-of-state students at a constant level.

Of the out-of-state students, 1,060 were rejected as not qualified and 1,482 were rejected because the quota had been filled. Those rejected because of the quota had lower predicted grade averages than those accepted.

The University also received a total of 2,159 applications for transfer. Almost all of the 722 accepted as transfer students are rising juniors. Of the transfer group, 480 are women.
