

Floyd McKissick Is CORE Director

NEW YORK (AP) — Floyd McKissick, a 44-year-old native of North Carolina who has moved to an apartment in New York's Harlem, became national director yesterday of the Congress of Racial Equality.

McKissick, a native North Carolinian and Durham lawyer, succeeded James Farmer, who now heads a national literacy program.

In recent years McKissick has served as CORE's national chairman.

Both McKissick and Farmer say CORE is moving into a new field and is deemphasizing protest parades, picket lines and fiery speeches about "freedom now."

"The dramatic action we used before is not as dramatic today," McKissick said. "Our sights have got to be set on the economic structure . . . It will take a much more sophisticated approach."

After completing high school in Asheville, McKissick attended Morehouse College in Atlanta and North Carolina College in Durham. The day after he was graduated from N.C. College a federal court directed that he be admitted to the University of North Carolina.

Later he filed the suit that opened the university's graduate school to Negroes, and after that brought the suit that ended public school segregation in Durham.

North Carolina News Roundup

Factory Payrolls Are Up

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — Wachovia Bank & Trust Co. reported today that North Carolina's factory payrolls in 1965 climbed 9.5 per cent to a record $2.3 billion.

The bank said the increase of an estimated $200 million stemmed from higher wages and expanded employment.

"Job and wage gains in both manufacturing and non-manufacturing businesses were major factors in the Tar Heel economy's strong advance during 1965," said a bank economist, "and the gains have continued this year."

"The unusually rapid expansion of the North Carolina economy in the last few months has given rise to concern over inflationary pressures," the economist said, "but our economy is basically sound and well balanced, and the outlook for 1966 is favorable."

Redistricting Suit Delayed

GREENSBORO (AP) — Unless special action is ordered, legal procedures are likely to delay a decision in a new North Carolina congressional redistricting of the 11 congressional districts would have to be redone, but allowed present districting to stand through the May 28 primaries.

But on Monday, a legal team headed by attorney Renn Drum of Winston-Salem petitioned the federal court to overturn its decision in the light of a U. S. Supreme Court decision of last Friday.

The three-judge panel's ruling last month called on the General Assembly to change the district boundaries at its 1967 session.

Routine procedure on Monday's petition would allow the state 20 days, plus three additional days for service, to answer. Under this procedure the state's answer would not be due until March 23, five days after the filing deadline.

Textile Union To Expand

CHARLOTTE (AP) — The Textile Workers Union of America will expand its activities in North and South Carolina and Georgia, General President William Pollock said yesterday.

Pollock made the statement in an address to members of the southeastern regional staff of the TWUA, who met in Charlotte.

He said the increase in union activities will be made "in response to mounting appeals from southern textile workers saddle with low wages and deprived of modern fringe benefits . . ."

Pollock said the textile industry "is reaping record-shattering profits," but is failing to share them with production workers. This situation is "inexcusable," he charged.

Johnson Sends Congress Health-Education Program

WASHINGTON (AP) — A multibillion dollar health-education program aimed at the aged-old problems of "pain and ignorance" was sent to Congress yesterday by President Johnson.

The emphasis was on such things as modernizing obsolete hospitals, providing balanced luncheons for poor school children, a start in serving meals to needy aged, liberalized financial aid to college students, facilities for the group practice of medicine, and an attack on the disease of alcoholism.

First reaction on Capitol Hill included several approving comments, and some critical questions.

Rep. Carl Albert of Oklahoma, House Democratic Leader, commended the President for what he called "the next logical step toward our goal of the best possible health and medical care for every man, woman and child in the United States."

Sen. George D. Aiken, R-Vt., called the message "worthy of intensive study" but questioned the making of new recommendations "when the administration is cutting down on the school lunch and school milk programs which have proven to be of such tremendous benefit to national health."

No cost total was placed on the program, but officials said the hospital modernization alone would run into billions of dollars over the years.

Johnson said one-third of the country's general hospitals, with 260,000 beds, are obsolete, and noted that the need for beds will grow as Medicare for the aged begins operating July 1.

He called for a loan-grant program to revitalize such hospitals. High officials said this would involve costs of $6 to $8 billion over 20 years, about 40 per cent of which would be federal money.

-Resolution Passes-

It declares the United States prepared — "as the President determines" — to use armed force in the defense of Southeast Asian freedom.

The House dissenters were Reps. Philip Burton and George Brown of California, William F. Ryan of New York and John Conyers of Michigan.

Rep. Adam Clayton Powell, D-N. Y., answered "present" when his name was called.

As the Senate argued about Presidential authority for the American stand in Viet Nam, Fulbright suggested that the United States seek neutralization of all of Southeast Asia.

Fulbright, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said the Vietnamese war could be permanently settled only with an understanding between the United States and Communist China.

Sen. Richard B. Russell, D-Ga., said defeat of the Morse move put the Senate "solidly behind the President."

Senate democratic leader Mike Mansfield of Montana said the action kept in effect "whatever constitutional force" is in the resolution, adopted on Aug. 10, 1964, after Communist Naval assaults on U. S. ships off Viet Nam.

"To that extent," Mansfield said, "the issue is clear even though this is not the appropriate way, in my opinion, to consider this matter."

But Sen. Jacob K. Javits, R-N.Y., opposing the Morse measure, insisted he was not voting to reaffirm the resolution. He said Johnson should come to Congress for a new declaration of support.

"What we are trying to do is to get on with the serious business in Viet Nam," said Senate Republican Leader Everett M. Dirksen, "and supply the American troops with whatever is necessary to do a complete and final job."

But Sen. Gaylord Nelson, D-Wis., said when he backed the original resolution, the American mission in Viet Nam was one of aiding and assisting the Vietnamese, not fighting. Nelson said he was assured at the time that the resolution involved no change in the U. S. role.

Sen. Joseph S. Clark, D-Pa., opposed the Morse amendment — but insisted he was not endorsing Johnson's policy.

"I haven't the slightest intention," Fulbright said unless the United States is prepared to fight a general war in Asia, "we have no alternative but to seek a general accommodation."

It seems to me that the crisis in Southeast Asia can only be resolved on a lasting basis by the neutralization of the entire region as between China and the United States," Fulbright said.

He said the United States should offer to remove all American military power from
