

Fang, The Football Dog, Closes In On BVP Quarterback

Huddles Take A Little Longer With Fang—He Thinks He's A Red Dog

Even Catches Frisbee's In Midair

UNC's Wonder Dog Fang!

"Fang,"—that's what students call him. And rightly so. He's the latest addition to the legions of Campus Critters that roam the rolling lawns of UNC.

This dog is a non-stop animal. He seems to have a fixation on anything that moves. During the Saturday warm up at Kenan, he chased the spiraling footballs up and down the chalked field as UNC kickers practiced and played keep-away at the same time.

Early this week, Fang made another appearance, this time on the north campus. During a frisbee game between three boys in front of Hill Hall, Fang charged out of the japonica bushes and leapt in the air repeatedly to catch the red disk in his mouth.

After tiring of that sport, he rambled down the walk to get underfoot in a traditional BVP razzle-dazzle football game.

Running between blockers, Fang always kept his attention focused on the man who had the ball. When a tackle was made, Fang would bounce about with wild eyes and smile as only a German Shepherd can.

Campus dogs come and campus dogs go, but this Fang is a real impressive recruit.

BVP Football Games Will Never Be The Same

Photos And Text By Jock Lauterer

Here Goes A Red Frisbee Into The Air . . .

Some Thirty Yards Later Fang Has Lept Up And Caught The Disk