The Sportscope

By Bill Hass

I am as addicted to reading pre-season predictions and weekly football polls as anyone else, but sometimes I wonder if they don't get carried away with themselves.

There really should be some system of determining one and one only national champion. Last year there were two. United Press International selected its number one team before the bowl games and picked Michigan State. The Associated Press waited until after the bowls and picked Alabama. Thus, if you read UPI stories this year Michigan State is trying to be the first team to win two national titles in a row in some 10 years. If you read AP, Alabama is shooting for its third straight title, something that hasn't been accomplished in many moons. Who should the reader believe?

Besides, I am of the opinion that weekly polls should not even be taken until the season is five weeks old. Some overrated teams are always ranked high early in the year. One school may boast that it upset the number eight team in the nation in the second game, but that means little when the other team finishes with a 5-5 record. Mississippi State was picked tenth last year after four weeks with a 4-0 mark. They promptly lost their last six straight. They were never the tenth best team in the nation, no matter what their record at what time.

The pre-season magazines are even worse. The really bad ones hit the stands in early July, trying to hook the football fan right away. The magazines usually make some absurd statements. For instance, one which came out claimed that Maryland would really be tough with Bo Hickey in the lineup. Funny thing about how Hickey flunked out two weeks before the magazine ever hit the stands.

Then there was Playboy's fiasco of last year. Now, I admire a great many things about that magazine, but their yearly football predictions are really hilarious. Last year they picked Iowa to be 9-1 and put three Iowa boys on their All-America team. Jerry Burns was selected as "Coach of the Year." Well, the three players were hardly heard from, Iowa had a disastrous 1-9 record and Jerry Burns was fired as head coach. Magazines are entitled to be mistaken, of course, but that was ridiculous.

This year Playboy ventured into the forecasting field again, but with a significant change. Alabama was picked as the number one team and Bear Bryant as Coach of the Year. Talk about playing it safe! How can you lose with that? Even if Alabama doesn't wind up number one, they will certainly finish in the top ten and make the writer look good.

It's always nice to be ranked in someone's poll, but in Carolina's Gator Bowl year UNC was not to be found in even the top 20. This year Street and Smith, probably the best of the magazines, picked the Tar Heels 13th in the country. Sometimes I really wonder what these guys think about.
